Baseball team finishes off St. Joseph's

Derek Dana and the Minutemen completed the sweep a four-game series from St. Joseph's with a pair of wins yesterday at Lorden Field.

Minutemen pick up two more key

By ADRIENNE MATT

Despite cloudy skies and impending wet weather, the University of Massachusetts baseball team cleanly swept their doubleheader series (7-2, 8-0) against St. Joseph's yesterday at Lorden Field.

St. Joe's came into the game 11-15-1 overall and 2-4 in the Atlantic 10 Conference, having just recovered from two blows from UMass (5-4, 7-3) on Sunday.

"St. Joe's is better than last year," said head coach Mike Stone. "We took a doubleheader split from them last year."

A strong third inning in the first game hoisted UMass over the edge as SJU remained scoreless until the fourth. Second at bat, junior Ian Torres was walked only to be brought home by sophomore Brian Bright who hit a solid homer, his fifth of the season. Bright's first homer of the series was in the first inning, a two-run shot that made it 2-0.

Senior Drew Comeau and sophomore Derek Dana singled. Sophomore Lou Olivieri brought Comeau home on a single, making it 5-0.

Momentum was the least of their worries, as the Minutemen continued to play aggressively and consistently. Freshman Steve Corradi hit his second home run of the season in the fourth, the only scoring seen by UMass in that inning. Corradi was 2-for-4 for the game.

Comeau slammed a double in the fifth to be pushed to third by sophomore Glenn DiSarcina who was out at first. Dana sacrificed to bring home Comeau, the last run batted in for the Minutemen.

Senior Dan O'Leary took the win, the only UMass pitcher in the game. He allowed only four hits, one earned run and had six strikeouts; he's currently 1-0 for the season.

The Hawks brought in two pitchers, neither performed well. Senior Dennis Senakerib (1-1) allowed nine hits and seven earned runs, three of which were home runs. He had only two strikeouts. In the fifth SJU head coach Chris Loschiavo pulled Senakerib to put in junior Gil Howard. He allowed five hits.

Hawk scoring in game one consisted of one player, senior Joe Capriotti who hit his second homer of the season in the sixth inning. Earlier in the fourth, he singled on a error by UM shortstop and stole second. Freshman Ron Obermeir was walked and a single by senior Jay Wrabel brought Capriotti home.

St. Joe's saw nothing but goose eggs in the second game. The stronger hitters for SJU were Capriotti and senior Mike Bylone, who were 2-for-3 each.

"We had some solid pitching in the series," said Stone. UMass freshman Scott Meaney pitched the entire game, winning his first collegiate shutout. He allowed only seven hits, walked four and struck out five. He's 2-0 for the season.

No homers were slammed but doubles abounded. Comeau (five doubles for the year) and Biagini (three) each had two doubles and brought in two. Each were 2-for-3 at bat. Dana (1-for-3) also hit a double, bringing in two.

Holy Cross to visit Lorden today

Soggy field conditions won't deter the Minutemen nor the Crusaders of Holy Cross College as the baseball teams meet at 3 p.m. at Lorden Field.

UMass is on a five-game winning streak, currently 5-1 since their return from Florida.

Holy Cross enters with a winning 9-2 record overall, with 5-1 in the Metro Atlantic Conference.

Sluggers for the Crusaders include junior first baseman Tom Miller, who has 17 hits for the season with a batting average of .421. Junior catcher Stafvan Drezek and sophomore left fielder Matt Morgan each have an average of .375.

Potent pitchers are junior David Leonard and sophomore Chip O'Neill. Leonard is 3-0 with one shutout under his belt. He has an ERA of 1.28. O'Neill is 2-1 with a 1.69 ERA.

Rebels spank Duke in finals

By JIM O'CONNELL
AP Basketball Writer

DENVER – The NCAA's ultimate Rebel won its biggest prize.

UNLV ended the tournament of thrills and close finishes with the largest margin of victory in a championship game, a 103-73 win over Duke last night.

Jerry Tarkanian, the coach who fought the NCAA in the courts for the past 15 years, guided UNLV to its first national title and Duke continued as the school with the most frustrating of postseason records.

The Runnin' Rebels became the first team to score more than 100 points in a championship game. They are also the first preseason No. 1 to win the title since North Carolina in 1982 and the first Western team since UCLA won in 1975.

They did it with the style they have made famous — tenacious man-to-man defense — as they rattled Duke, a team known for its savvy and poise.

The Rebels literally stole the title from Duke, which was making its eighth Final Four appearance. The Blue Devils went home again without a trophy, extending the longest streak of national semifinal futility.

UNLV broke the tournament record for steals in a game with 16, eclipsing the mark set by Duke in the 1986 championship game and matched by Oklahoma in the 1988 title game.

The Runnin' Rebels also set a record for most points scored in a tournament with 571, just better than their regular season average of 92.3.

Until last night, the largest margin of victory in a championship game was 23 points, when UCLA beat North Carolina 78-55 in 1968.

For Tarkanian, the man who sits on the bench looking as though it pains him to watch his team win, getting the trophy capped a long battle with the NCAA, which ordered the school to suspend him for violations. He went to court for an injunction and the case eventually reached the Supreme Court, whcih ruled in favor of the NCAA.

But no court could stop the Runnin' Rebels last night.

Russ, Booker NCAA-bound

Eggers, Christensen alternates for regionals at Penn State

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

Senior Carl Russ and sophomore Cal Booker qualified to represent the University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team in the NCAA Eastern Regional finals at Penn State on Apr. 7.

Senior co-captain John Eggers and freshman Steve Christensen also qualified as alternates. The top six individuals in each event qualify, as do the top 10 teams in the East region.

Booker qualified as an individual in both floor exercises and vaulting.

"I just want to take one of the top spots and go to nationals," Booker said. "This should make me look positively to qualifying next year, and it will give me a name for the judges."

UMass coach Roy Johnson praised the efforts of his two seniors, both of whom were superlative performers in still ring competition.

"This will be a great statement on how much [Russ] has continued to persevere and train hard," Johnson said.

Russ qualified to compete at Penn State with an average of 9.46 in his top three rings performances, while Eggers averaged 9.43 to take an alternate spot.

"John had a lot of interferences beyond his control this season — his injury hurt him," Johnson said, referring to an Achilles heel injury which kept Eggers out of all-around competition for several meets late in the season.

"He really had a good focus and trained hard," continued Johnson.

For freshman Christensen, who was the Minutemen's high scorer in all-around competition for many meets this season, the announcement meant a look to the future.

"I'm just glad the season's over," Christensen said. "Everything's just starting to fall apart — my wrists, my ankles, my knees . . .

"My goal is to make regionals in all-around next year," continued Christensen. "I'm going to work on getting stronger — lifting more and building up my ankles."

"I think Cal and Carl have a shot to score well and qualify [for nationals]," Johnson said.

Although it's been a long season, nobody would object extending it for a trip to nationals.

Fire in Gorman deemed suspicious

By JULIE LIVINGSTONE
Collegian Staff

A fire caused severe damage to a trash room in Gorman Residence Hall at 4:07 a.m. yesterday, forcing 300 residents to evacuate the building for almost two hours.

"Preliminary investigations show [the fire] has suspicious origins," said Bob Chisholm, principal emergency dispatcher of the Amherst Fire Department.

Chisholm said the Amherst Fire Department and University of Massachusetts police will continue investigating the cause of the fire.

One woman was treated and released from University Health Services for heat and smoke related problems. No other injuries were reported. Karen Sherbin, spokesperson for UMass said the estimated damage is $2,500.

The Amherst Fire Department responded to the scene with three engines, and one rescue crew. After extinguishing the fire, the crew forced excess smoke from the room by shattering the first floor window.

"Fire damage was confined to the first floor trash room and smoke damage was evidenced through one portion of first floor South. Water damage was apparent in a room directly next door to the site," Chisholm said.

Phone junction boxes and wiring for the alarm system were destroyed in the fire and walls were smoke-singed. Workers from the UMass Telecommunications Office and maintenance workers from Berkshire House were busy from 7 a.m. to 5 p.m. painting walls and re-wiring the phone lines.

Joe Manzer, head of the painting crew, said: "We just want to get these kids back in their rooms as soon as possible."

While students awaited the call to return to bed after what they believed to be a false alarm, word worked its way through the group of groggy residents that it was a real fire.

Residents stood outside clad in sleep attire for approximately an hour and a half, they were then moved inside the basement of Wheeler Residence Hall for 40 minutes while fire department staff investigated all rooms.

Several residents from the first floor were told by the fire department that their rooms were "unliveable" and could not spend the night there. All 32 residents were offered housing in the Campus Center Hotel; two students took the offer. Others found friends to stay with.

Sophomore Heather Cooley, a first floor resident said: "I felt uncomfortable returning to my room this morning, after I realized the fire could have been much worse."

Students were allowed to return to the floor at 5 p.m., said John Finley, director of maintenence at Berkshire House.

Two other trash room fires in the Cashin Residence Hall were reported over the weekend. John Luippold, University of Massachustts deputy chief of police, said there is no evidence of a connection between the Gorman and Cashin fires.

Inconsistencies found in University claims

By PRATIP DASTIDAR
Collegian Staff

The controversy surrounding University of Massachusetts investments in companies linked to the Republic of South Africa deepened yesterday, as new information revealed inconsistencies in the University's claims that it screened its holdings against a list published by the Investors Responsibility Research Center.

The IRRC is a Washington D.C.-based group which monitors corporate involvement in the RSA. Over the last year, UMass has invested in at least 10 businesses which allegedly do business with the RSA via distribution and licensing agreements and loans and underwritings, according to the UMass stock portfolio.

In response to charges that UMass is violating its investment policy, Chancellor Duffey said yesterday: "The University adheres to a policy of refusing to hold investments in companies that appear in the IRRC list."

Duffey said two of the 10 companies identified yester-

Students outraged over alleged violations

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
Collegian Staff

A student panel last night on WMUA's "Diaspora" radio show expressed shock and outrage over recent reports that the University of Massachusetts may be investing in companies that conduct business with the Republic of South Africa in violation of University policy.

"The absolute hypocrisy of this is inviting Mandela [to speak at the University] and then having such investments," said Rudy Krigger, a senior political science major, who was referring to the invitation Chancellor Duffey made in February via Maki Mandela, daughter of the recently released activist.

The students were particularly concerned because the investments made by the firms which manage the University's stock portfolio are examined by UMass Treasurer Robert Brand only at the end of each month.

The students said this practice does not allow the University to fully control its investments and enforce its policies.

Temporary faculty hiring freeze due to budget shortfall

By KEN MAGUIRE
Collegian Correspondent

A 10-day freeze on faculty recruitment at the University of Massachusetts was implemented Monday because of an expected budget shortfall next year of at least $2 million, according to University officials.

It is likely the shortfall will force an eventual reduction in faculty, said Paul Page, vice chancellor for administration and finance.

"The lion's share of the reductions will have to come from personnel," because faculty make up about 80 percent of the expenses in the state budget, Page said.

"Personnel, combined with utilities, make up ninety percent of the expenses in the state budget, and since we cannot shut utilities off, we don't have any choice but to cut from faculty," Page said.

The University's fiscal problems are attributed to Dukakis' recommendation for a reduced budget next year, increases in utility costs, such as gas, electric and dumping fees, and continued spending from the operating budget for capital expenses, such as removing asbestos and correcting steam line problems, which are normally provided by the state, Page said.

Through attrition, faculty would lose 21 positions in addition to the 60 predicted lost under the stabilization plan of a year ago.

"Right now it's too early to tell how these cuts will effect classes, but if we keep going on this course it's bound to have a negative effect,' said Karin Sherbin, UMass spokeswoman.

Bruce Laurie, vice president of the Massachusetts Society of Professors and graduate program professor of history, was outraged by the expected faculty reduction.

"This diminishes the value of students' degrees,' he said.

"The longer this is accepted, the worse it will get. Drastic action is needed by everyone — students, faculty and administrative leaders."

Laurie said a tax increase to counteract the effects of the expected shortfall is "probably the only solution," but he said, said we cannot be certain that the state government will allocate money to education.

Book reading benefits local women's shelter

Itabari Njeri gives taste of "Every Good-bye Ain't Gone"

By DIANE HICKS
Collegian Staff

Itabari Njeri, professional writer, singer, and actress read from her recently released book, "Every Good-bye Ain't Gone" last night at the University of Massachusetts' Memorial Hall, to benefit the Everywoman's Center and Necessities/Necesidades, a battered women's shelter located in Northampton.

The non-fiction work is reminiscent of the author's childhood, carrying the reader through a difficult time for American's of color, and the more personal battle faced by women in abusive situations.

Njeri's reading was vibrantly powerful, with an absorbing tempo evolving around her sharply pronounced, deeply penetrating words.

A certain energy overcame Njeri as she read her memiors, playing the raspy voice of her grandmother, articulating the Carribean Creole accent of the women she knew as a child.

Tension filled the air, only to be broken by a single statement, and a lapse of calm relieving the audience for only seconds before the rhythm of her reading resumed.

A stirring, dramatic, and extremely powerful performance, she swept back and forth through time with the eloquence of film. In fact her vivid words challenged the visual media, with rich adjectives painting the picture as she read the dialogue.

The title, "Every Good-bye Ain't Gone," is a line spoken by Njeri's grandmother, in the book. It represents the perpetuance of history; meaning everything leaves an impression. This corresponds to the Creole or African influenced tradition that is part of her, as well as the mark left by violence against women.

In her book, Njeri recalls one of her father's violent attacks on her mother. "I swore I'd never let that happen to me, or anyone else I had the power to help" she said, adding, "I didn't have the power to help my mother."

Njeri said, "I have asked my publisher to make sure that my readings benefit battered women's shelters."

She has been touring her book since February, and will continue through June, with a paperback tour scheduled for Spring.

Although she has participated in many readings, few have benefited battered women's shelters, she said. Her publisher has been less cooperative than she would like.

Njeri read for women imprisoned at Records Island in New Jersey, and scheduled benefits for a center at Spellman College, and the Jenesee Center in her current home of Los Angeles.

Last night's event raised approximately $400 to be split between the Everywoman's Center and Necessities/Necesidades, said Carol Wallace, director of the Everywoman's Center.

This total did not include the ten percent of sales from Njeri's book that the Jeffery Amherst Bookshop donated last night. Ty Lorenzo, manager of that store's college division said that Madeleine Blais, Associate Professor of Journalism at UMass suggested the idea of the donation and he welcomed it.

The departments of Journalism, Afro-American, and Women's Studies, as well as the Panhellenic Council sponsored the event.

Jeanne Bolduc, spokesperson for the Council said, "violence against women is something all women should fight against and by helping out with this event we are doing that."

Magnetic locks implemented in Orchard Hill

By SARAH DEMASTER
Collegian Staff

Housing Services at the University of Massachusetts is using dormitories in the Orchard Hill Residential Area as guinea pigs in an attempt to increase campus security through its installation this week of magnetic doors, according to Joseph Zannini, director of housing services.

The system has been designed so that side doors opened between 8 p.m. and 12 p.m Sunday through Wednesday, or between 8 p.m. and 3 a.m. Thursday through Saturday in Webster, Dickinson, Grayson, and Field Residential Halls will cause an alarm to sound.

Staff members in the Grayson-Field cluster office and the Dickinson-Webster cluster office, both of whom wanted to withhold their names, said they have had no reports of students setting off the alarms.

Zannini said while students may find it inconvenient to use only the front door at night, he thinks the doors will add to the security of the buildings.

"We still see residence halls as safe," Zannini said. "But we are living in a society where we have a lot of tragic incidents around us."

Zannini cited the Dec. 18 slaying of University of Massachusetts junior Sharon Galligan at the Hampshire Mall as one example.

While the Galligan slaying is one of the factors involved, Housing Services was already planning to install the doors before the incident occurred, Zannini said.

Housing Services has also taken into account the number of assaults that have occurred at UMass, and the number of people who have been arrested on or around the campus who are not University students, he said.

The doors are not a permanent solution, Zannini said. Housing Services will look at how the doors function from now until the end of the semester, to determine whether they are the most efficient and cost-effective means of adding to dormitory security. The doors may be tied in with other security devices in the future, he said.

Several students in Orchard Hill said they do not feel the doors are a good idea.

Sophomore Connie Raleigh, who lives in Webster, said, "Maybe it's a good idea for an inner-city school, where there's more of a crime problem, but I don't think it's necessary here."

Freshman Ben Ware, a resident of Grayson, said, "The only weirdos in the building are already in the building."

Freshman Yan Schecter, who lives in Dickinson said he also does not see the logic in installing the doors.

"When's the last time a terrorist broke in?" he said.

SGA, BOG battle over funds

By DARREN GARNICK
and JULIE LIVINGSTONE
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association and the Board of Governors, embroiled in a tug-of-war over University of Massachusetts undergraduate student funds, plan to air their differences tonight on the senate floor.

The SGA allocates money to the BOG from the Student Activities Trust Fund, a mandatory recreation fee undergraduates pay on their UMass tuition bill. In February, the SGA proposed to cut the BOG's funding from $7 to $2 per fee-paying student.

According to BOG Treasurer Garron J. Carvalho, this amounts to a 70 percent cut for the 1991 fiscal year. He said about $71,000 of the more than $90,000 cut from the BOG budget accounts for the operating costs of the Student Union Art Gallery, the Craft Shop and the University Program Council. These groups will continue to receive funding under the SGA's authority, Carvalho said.

The BOG's main concern is an additional $27,000 proposed cut that would eliminate the BOG's Program Council, a group that sponsors entertainers in the Campus Center.

SGA Speaker Dan Chesnicka said the proposed cut from the budget will lead to increased funding for Registered Student Organizations. RSOs would not have to petition the BOG to receive funding for events, he said. Because the money is originally derived from the SGA budget, Chesnicka said the move "eliminates a middle man" between the senate and student groups.

"We are not looking to demolish the BOG. We think they play key functions in maintaining the Campus Center," he said. "They take care of space allocations and vending policies as well as many other things."

Carvalho said giving the Program Council's money to RSO programs deprives students who enjoy events like Comedy Night.

"Only about 10 percent of the student body are in RSOs," he said. "RSOs have certain events just for their constituency. BOG-PC programs cater to the University in general. Not too many RSO programs have 700 people show up."

However, Chesnicka maintains that RSOs such as the Black Mass Communications Project, WMUA, and UPC serve many more than the 10 percent figure.

"Running on that 10 percent assumption is a weak argument," he said.

Carvalho said he met last week with SGA Treasurer Karen Talbot, who told him the senate will amend the budget proposal to fund the BOG at $2.50 per student, not the earlier figure of $2.

Chesnicka said the SGA cuts to the BOG are a result of the state "rolling back" the cost of fringe benefits for professional University employees, paid for through the Student Activities Trust Fund.

Council files complaint after student disruption

By AMY HENRY
Collegian Staff

The Panhellenic Council has filed a complaint with the Dean of Students against a University of Massachusetts' undergraduate in response to a disruption at the Mademoiselle Magazine fashion show last Wednesday night in the Student Union Ballroom, said Jeanne Bolduc, a spokeswoman for the Council.

Meaghan Burchell, a UMass sophomore who was named in the complaint, said she thought it 'ridiculous' that charges were brought against her and that "the issue had been blown out of proportion." She said she spoke out against the magazines because, "they objectify and insult women."

"There is a correlation between these types of magazines and eating disorders," she said. Burchell got up on stage at the end of the meeting last Wednesday and said that women did not need beauty products and that they were beautiful without them. The complaint, Buldoc said, states the disruption endangered people's lives because a toxic paint, woodstain, was poured on two magazines. Burchell is also being charged with disorderly conduct and malicious and willfull destruction of property.

"She showed blatant disregard for the University, the Panhellenic Council, and the host companies," Bolduc said. "We are in support of the first amendment but there are better ways to express one's views than to destroy property and disrupt a peaceful assembly."

Charmain Wijeyesinghe, assistant dean of students, said her office will review the complaint to see if the Code of student conduct was violated. If a violation is found then Burchell will be contacted in 48 hours, she said.

Government use of sedition, treason discussed

When Pat Levassaur and Robert Meeropol speak at Hampshire College tonight, the topic at hand will not be supportive of the U.S. government.

Victims and prisoners of the political machine will be the subject discussed at tonight's lecture in Franklin Patterson's Main Lecture Hall at Hampshire College at 8 p.m. Sponsored by the "Public Service and Social Change Committee" the lecture is titled, "SOME GET KILLED OUTRIGHT, SOME ARE BURIED ALIVE."

Patricia Levassaur is currently the only defendant from the recent Ohio Seven sedition trial in Springfield who is not in jail. As a result of the apparent victimization by the government of her and her family and friends, she sees a responsibility "to fight for political prisoners," as she told the Collegian at the time of the trial.

Ethel and Julius Rosenberg, who some have called the most visible scapegoat victims of McCarthy's communist 'witch hunts' in the 1950s, were executed for treason during that period. They were put to death in the electric chair when their son, Robert Meeropol, was three years old. Meeropol has done extensive research work into the governmental persecution and subsequent deaths of his parents.

In a Focus article in last semester's Collegian on the Ohio Seven, Levassaur's attorney for the trial, William Newman, discussed the similarity between the Rosenberg case and last year's Ohio Seven trial.

"The government can exploit and instigate hysteria to destroy dissent against it, as well as orchestrating public opinion against it's opponents — it is our government that destroyed the Black Panther Movement. The government brands people who oppose it as being somehow un-American, yet the truth is that dissent which challenges authority is the premise of how this entire country was built, at least in theory."

Fighting the fear

Women seek weapons, defense to gain empowerment

By KERRY HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

As she had done so many times since coming to the University of Massachusetts, Gail Girasella was walking home alone from the library one night when she came to a startling realization: She could be in danger.

"I looked in the bushes I was passing, I realized there could be someone in there or anywhere," Girasella said with a shudder. 'And they could completely change my life by raping me or something. And I couldn't do anything about it."

Girasella would not describe herself as paranoid. She said she was just coming to terms with the reality of her vulnerability.

"It really freaked me out," she said.

Girasella's attitude is reflective of many women on campus, according to Gina Gombar, co-president of Progressive Organization for Women's Rights. She said we, as a society, need to look closer at violence against women.

"Is it really women who perpetuated this problem?" Gombar asked. "By agreeing with that principle we are going along, trying to make excuses for a problem that lies so deeply under our society."

Violence against women can occur anywhere to anyone, Gombar said. On December 6, 1989, 14 women were shot to death at the University of Montreal by a man who said feminists "ruined my life," according to an Associated Press report.

A woman warms up before her karate class at Valley Women's Martial Arts.

Twelve days later, on December 18, UMass junior Sharon Galligan was slain and found in her car at the Hampshire Mall in Hadley. Although a composite sketch was released of the male suspect, no arrests have been made.

Gombar said Galligan's murder had a "scary impact" on her. She said she is aggravated by the lack of evidence in the case.

"Anyone could be that person in that sketch," Gombar said. "You think about that when you are at the busstop or walking down the street and you look into the face of a stranger."

Gombar said there are some things which can be done in reaction to the Galligan case.

"There is something constructive we can do about this," Gombar said. "We can work with the community and administration to help fight this."

Women seek protection

Months after the Galligan case, women are looking for alternatives. Mace has become the protection which many women have purchased, according to Bill Van, an employee at Pioneer Sporting Center who has sold approximately 150 cans of mace in the last three months. Van said most of the purchasers were women.

"It's like everything else," Van said of the increase in sales. "There's a demand for it, then it levels off."

A firearms identification permit must be obtained at a local police station before a person can purchase mace, according to Lt. Dennis Huckowicz of the Hadley police department. Huckowicz said since people do not need to state a reason for wanting the FID card, no definite corollations can be made to the Galligan homicide.

"No one who is applying for the permit is saying anything," Huckowicz said. "But, you could probably read between the lines and suspect women are inquiring because of what happened at the mall. A lot of women go there alone."

Valley Women's Martial Arts of Easthampton provides women with classes which include self-defense.

Kathy Johnston, president of Chi Omega where Galligan was a member, said she feels that many women may rely too heavily on mace or other weapons to ensure their protection.

"It can give you a false sense of security," Johnston said. "Especially if you use it at the wrong time."

Gombar said she has purchased mace in the past, but this option does not get at the real issue.

"It's a good step," Gombar said. "But it seems to be going along, trying to treat the symptom, not the root of the problem."

Other alternatives

On one corner of the wall at Valley Women's Martial Arts in Easthampton, is a small sign hanging among the many articles and pictures. The message is written in simple caligraphy: "The function of freedom is to be free of someone else." The Valley Women's Martial Arts provides another method of self-defense and helps women build their self esteem. The goal of the program, according to Beth Holt, one of the head instructors, is to teach women a lot more than how to fight.

"Our instruction is drawn on certain skills," Holt said. "But, it is not simply how to fight. This is a place to become grounded in yourself."

Created in 1977, Valley Women's Martial Art is a non-profit organization which teaches women and girls karate, self defense, and Arnis (Filipino stickfighting.)

Holt said there is not a "huge" focus on weapons. It incorporates the combination of body, mind and spirit which helps women build their self esteem she said.

"Women need to find a safe place where they are able to share their fears and have a place to work through it," Holt said.

Holt said the program has been successful when women feel good about themselves.

"Women always leave feeling empowered with a positive attitude," Holt said. "Even though they realize they are not superwomen, they are more aware and have more options."

Holt said women who carry weapons know better how to use them.

"It is incredibly easy for an attacker to use guns against a woman," Holt said. "It sometimes makes someone feel stronger, thinking she has found a solution. Yet, they are actually more vulnerable."

Holt said her experience from running workshops in all of the five colleges over the years made her realize there are many college women who are very naive.

"There are college women who are shocked about the dangers around them," Holt said. "They refuse to believe that they could be affected."

Holt believes her program provides a "service to the needs of women in a violent society."

"I don't think the world is going to change and men are going to stop raping and killing women," Holt said. "By recognizing the options, there is less of a need to feel isolated and alone. Valley Women Martial Arts provides path to empowerment."

Gomar said the problem of violence against women is two-sided.

"The sole responsibility does not lie with the woman," Gomar said. "Men have to take the responsibility too."

Some men are also aware of the dangers on the UMass campus, said Kevin Taylor, a senior legal studies major at the University who worked security last year.

> "There are college women who are shocked about the dangers around them. They refuse to believe that they could be affected."
> –Beth Holt
> head instructor at Valley Women's Martial Arts

"I don't think it's safe because UMass is a microcosm of society," Taylor said. "And I think society is getting worse."

Taylor said he knows a lot of women who fear walking across campus.

"Lighting is a big problem here," Taylor said. "UMass should work on it because they are responsible."

Senior computer science major, Mark Tomlinson said he usually makes sure his women friends get home safely.

"It makes me feel better to not have my girlfriend walk back alone," Tomlinson said.

Scott Dunlap, a freshman at UMass does not think UMass is "any worse" than any other college campus.

"I would offer to be an escort if it was a long walk and the woman felt it was necessary," he said.

"It is nice if men walk women home and are aware this is going on," Beth Rosenthal, a freshman living in Orchard Hill Residential Area said. "A lot of the time I feel I'm being overly paranoid."

Gomar hopes that reports of violence against women will not keep them powerless.

"You need to step out of roles which keep you submissive and oppressed," Gomar said. "You need to find something which will give you the confidence and empowerment so you can take control of your own life."

Future of women in male-based business world discussed

By DIANE HICKS
Collegian Staff

A panel of Smith College Alumni spoke of their trials in a male-dominated corporate world, and revealed their anticipations for businesswomen, and corporations in the nineties, yesterday at the Neilson Library at Smith.

"We have been moving against the wind in the last decade and the last twenty years" said Susan Lowance, director of the Management Program at Smith College.

Introducing the panel of Smith College graduates, Lowance said, "these women have paid the price and made the trade-offs" adding that women of the last twenty years have paved the way for corporate women in the future.

The women offered varrying opinions of what the future holds for corporate America: June Barry, Senior Vice-President of Fidelity Bank in Philadelphia said, "I am extremely optimistic about the nineties and moving forward."

Suzzane Nagel, Director of Manufacturing process R and D at AT and T Bell Labratories in Princeton, pointed out the difficulties she faced resulting from the conflict between her career and her gender.

She said, "I think it's important to understand that there's still that kind of battle [for women in non-traditional occupations]."

Lastly, Vanessa Clark Brooks, Tax Counsel to Congressman Harold Ford said, "Don't think that because on paper America has made some valuable changes, that [women] are where we should be."

Brooks noted the differences between men and women, as having to do with the interpersonal environment. She pointed out that gender differences continue to exist as they are learned behaviors resulting from socialization.

"[Women] have a lot of things to bring to the workplace" Brooks said, adding "both aspects of men's views in corporations and women's views in corporations have to come together."

She said, people need to bring new identities for men and women to corporations, and work at creating a new environment free of gender conflict.

"Bringing in differences will strengthen the corporation," Brooks said.

All panelists maintained that differences are emerging in the workplace, and the roles of men along with women are changing.

Nagel said, "I've seen many changes in what men and women are demanding coming out of college" adding that emerging young professionals are not willing to sacrifice their personal life for the corporation.

Additionally, childcare is not exclusively a women's issue anymore. Nagel said, "Interestingly the men are starting to demmand [childcare] and that is always a good sign.

Panelists agreed that corporations would only develop childcare programs to attract labor or boost productivity; yet noted with the increase of women in the workforce, and more paternalistic men entering the corporate world, the integration of a childcare system could be an financial asset.

day by the Collegian as having involvements in South Africa — Merchants National and Digital Equipment Corp. — were found in violation of the divestment policy early last month.

He said the University's brokers were instructed to sell these stocks on March 23. He asserted that the other investments were not on the IRRC list, and hence were legitimate.

"The brokers have copies of the [IRRC] list. Oversights or errors in purchase can happen, and such stocks are sold after screening. Mistakes occur occasionally," Duffey said.

Robert Brand, UMass treasurer, said yesterday that Eaton Corp., Sears Roebuck & Co., Morgan Stanley Inc., Alleghany International Inc. and Delta Airlines, all allegedly linked to the RSA, were not listed by the IRRC and were valid investments.

But Alison Cooper, the compiler of the IRRC list, said in a telephone interview yesterday from her Washington office that Eaton Corp., Boeing Corp., Baxter International Inc., and Alleghany International Inc. are present on the IRRC list and do conduct business with the RSA.

"Your University seems to be only paying attention to selective parts of our list," she said. "Some of these companies are listed in appendices, others in main sections."

Brand also added that the University no longer owns stock in Baxter International Inc., which also is allegedly linked to the RSA. When informed that the University's August '89 portfolio listed Baxter as a holding, Brand acknowledged that the University held these stocks in the past.

Brand said he is not sure whether all the brokers had copies of the IRRC list. "We could consult the list used in the [Collegian] story, but we would need additional staff to cope with the extra effort," he said.

A second and more detailed list, which was cited in the Collegian yesterday as the source for the divestment violations, is published by the American Committee on Africa, based in New York.

Richard Knight, the compiler of this "unified" list, was contacted yesterday and said this list removes all ambiguity by naming all the companies with any type of South African involvement, without appendices. The IRRC list splits companies into sections and appendices.

Knight also confirmed that the companies cited by Cooper operated in the RSA. "Treasurers like to own certain stocks," he said. "Unless there is ongoing vigilant monitoring, things will slip. Students must be firm."

Solly Simelane, the New York-based representative of the African National Congress said yesterday: "The international community must understand that the present situation has not changed. Violations of sanctions support our oppression."

"Students must fight for peace and justice in South Africa by putting pressure and exposing the University when it violates divestment," he said. "The agony and exploitation of the people of South Africa can only deepen by economic cooperation with apartheid."

■ student reaction to investment questions

"This is a question of a structural problem to insure that this doesn't happen again," Krigger said. "We don't have any means to check the daily tradings of the University."

"The University has made a policy to avoid getting egg on its face but then it doesn't enforce it," he said.

Clause 2-A of the University's investment policy forbids the University from investing in companies or companies with affiliates that do business in South Africa. The policy also forbids investment in companies that do business in countries with similar apartheid policies.

Many students thought the existence of the investments were indicative of the United States' and the University's attitude toward South Africa.

Tomas Garcia, a junior Social Thought and Political Economy major, said the United States' worst enemy is "apathy."

"The United States is so disconnected from the rest of the world," he said. "The reality of apartheid is that it happens all the time in South Africa. It's not just something on the news."

Thomas Mambande, who hosted the WMUA show, said discrimination because of color is not only a problem in South Africa but also at UMass.

"We need to look externally and face the oppression of Third World students," Mambande said. "But we also need to look internally and deal with the oppressive contradictions that exist here."

Math contest offers tuition grants

By TAMARA SILBERMAN
Collegian Correspondent

If mathematics is your game, then the math competition might be for you. The Mathematics/Statistics Department is sponsoring its fifth annual mathematics competition on April 5. The competition is open to all University freshmen and sophomore.

United Technologies is offering a first prize tuition grant of $1500 in cash. Electronic Data Systems will contribute the second prize of $800 and the Mathematics/Statistics Department is offering the third prize of $300 in cash.

The competition will be comprised of a 2-hour test of 10 very challenging problems. Company representatives, who are contributing the prizes, and parents are invited to attend the May 3 awards ceremony. Last year's competition attracted 74 contestants.

The competition will take place April 5 at 7:30 PM at the Lederle Graduate Tower, Rm. 1634. UMass I.D. will be required. Those not eligible are Continuing Education students, students not in the classes of 1992 or 1993, previous first place winners, and relatives of the Mathematics/Statistics Department Staff.

SUMMER AND/OR FALL CAMPUS EMPLOYMENT AT THE VISITORS CENTER

Campus employment opportunities exist for 3-4 students this summer and/or succeeding semesters at the Visitors Center.

QUALIFICATIONS: Good public relations and communication skills; comfortable and adept in dealing with the public; knowledgeable about campus facilities, programs, and services; ability to access information and to make appropriate referrals; enthusiasm for the University.

ELIGIBILITY: Undergraduates (preferably College Work Study eligible), with at least three semesters remaining at the beginning of the Fall Semester 1990 (excluding summer).

PAY RATE: $5.00 per hour.

WORK SCHEDULE: Summer- Must be available for a minimum of three consecutive hours at least two days per week (Monday-Friday) between 9:00am and 4:30pm June, July,and August. A weekend option will also be available in August.

Fall and Spring Semesters- Must be available for a minimum of two consecutive hours at least two days per week (Monday-Friday) between 9:00am and 4:30pm; weekends, 10:30am-3:30pm inclusive.

STARTING DATE: Summer- June 4, 1990.

Fall and Spring Semesters- Registration weekend.

APPLICATIONS: Obtain an application and detailed job description at the Visitors Center. Deadline for both Summer and Fall Semester is April 13, 1990. An interview may be required.

The Visitors Center opened in November, 1988. Its purpose is to make the campus more "user friendly" by providing a central location to serve and assist visitors (primarily prospective applicants and their parents) in obtaining accurate preliminary information, referrals, and materials about the University, as well as providing information about such concerns as parking, area food services, campus events, maps, etc. After one year, nearly 25,000 individuals had been served. The Visitors Center is operated by Student Affairs Information Services (which also includes IDB/TIPS).

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted

Divestment means commitment

We are appalled and infuriated by the recent revelation of the University's investments in the Republic of South Africa (RSA).

In 1977 the University decided to divest from the RSA. Clause 2A of the University's current investment policy states that "The University will not invest in any company or lending institution which either directly or through its subsidiaries or affiliates does business in or with the RSA or in countries with similar racial policies."

As in the past, the administration blatantly ignores its own policy.

In 1984 and 1985 the discovery of investments in RSA resulted in sit-ins by the student body. As a result, the administration promised to reevaluate its list of investments. Students, especially those of color, were reassured of the administration's commitment to the effort to abolish the system of Apartheid.

Today in 1990 we see once again that the administration has no sound commitment to its own policy. Why must students and concerned community members continually go after the administration to keep its priorities straight?

The administration has lied to all of us.

This is a direct insult not only to people of color, but to all who view Apartheid as an atrocity.

The University allowed the purchase of stocks linked to RSA. It may decide to sell these stocks like it has in the past. Such an action does not compensate for the attitudes of neglect and indifference which allowed for the purchase in the first place. The past has shown that the administration cannot be trusted.

Students are punished when they violate the code of conduct. But when the administration violates policy, to whom are they held accountable?

The administration can rest assured that we are watching and will continue to make sure that its commitment is met.

Investment in the Republic of South Africa will not be tolerated.

Gullible givers pay the price

I think charities and non-profit volunteer programs that collect money to help the underpriveleged are good. It makes sense that each of us can donate whatever we can afford — be it a quarter or a million dollars — to help those who aren't as lucky to have some of the things we do.

Julie Kotsifas

These groups change lives and benefit our land and its quickly depleting resources and make us aware of some of the bad things that exist in our midst.

And then there are those who pose as charities, the con artists out to make a quick buck by preying on innocent passersby. Like those men who solicited for money on North Pleasant Street.

You must know who they are. They were the men who hung out in pairs on their designated "turf" — in front of the Post Office and Shawmut Bank. No matter how terrible the weather was, they were out there. But friendly they weren't.

Those nice words were really a threat. Beneath that happy-go-lucky smile was a growl, snarling "I'll get you, my pretty!" and cackling as you cowered inside the Post Office, waiting for them to corner some other victim so you could make your getaway.

They seemed to have a different cause every other week: "Help inner-city kids learn how to read," "Help the homeless," "Feed the children." These men helped everyone. Finally, sick and tired of their badgering, I gave them a dollar. I figured that would keep them at bay for a while.

Nope. The next day they were right back at it again, only yesterday's noble cause had apparently been miraculously rectified in one mere day. Now, they were pumping for some new hard-luck segment of the population.

I put up with it because it was "for a good cause." That's the line everyone spits out to get you to spit out more money.

Now I find out that I was wrong. Those men were frauds. And I am mad.

Those men fooled all of us. C'mon, I'm not the only schmuck. I bet many of you finally broke down under pressure (at least once) and handed over some cold cash to the con men.

No, we're just normal, trusting human beings who believe in helping our fellow man (and we'll do just about anything to get someone off our back).

But these men were hanging out on North Pleasant for over a year, bothering the hell out of us. Why didn't anyone question their presence?

Why didn't city officials inquire as to why two men can stand anywhere they felt like in Amherst and harangue every passerby offensively?

And what made the UMass community finally look into the matter, after all this time (and money) has gone by?

Gullible minds want to know.

I'm glad these men have left, even though we'll never see our hard-earned money again. I wonder what our cash went to buy: perhaps some shiney new drugs for the kids on the street, maybe a brand new car so our two friends can solicit in style, or a new pad so they can set up a Drive-In Con Window.

These men took my money, but they did a lot more than that. They destroyed my faith in charitable foundations. I will never again be so free and willing to donate.

I will always be suspicious of charities. And while that may save me a lot of money, it won't help inner-city kids learn to read, help the homeless, or feed the children.

We were all duped by these very enterprising men, who are probably laughing right about now as they drive their just-bought Toyota to the next town, and new possibilities.

I'm just glad I only gave them a buck.

Fashion show insults educated mind

The gross level of participation in Wednesday night's fashion show in the Campus Center Auditorium was infuriating and discouraging.

Mass-circulated, beauty-oriented publications such as Mademoiselle deify the process of becoming an object.

It is corporate manipulation in a glossy context; these types of magazines and events (fashion shows and beauty pageants) are one long, offensive advertisement. They, the editors and advertising executives, encourage enslavement to mirrors, scales, curling irons, tweezers, lacquer and diet soda.

These ideals are antithetical to the goal of a liberal arts education, which is to graduate intelligent, confident individuals capable of forming their own decisions.

These periodicals erode a healthy relationship between mind and body. This dichotomy catalyzes a self-hatred of the body when it doesn't achieve the standard. The results are evident: one in four college women experience bulimia.

I do not regret my actions at the show. However, as a believer in free speech, I'm unconvinced that breaking the law furthers anyone's cause. In the future, I will direct my anger and energies towards organized protest and other legal means.

The objectification printed by Mademoiselle poisons women's individualism. We wouldn't have the right to vote if Susan B. Anthony was constantly agonizing over her sex appeal.

Budget cuts in Department of Mental Health intolerable

We have all been rallying, writing letters, signing petitions, and being altogether vocal about our outrage concerning the budget cuts here at UMass.

This is wonderful, but I would like to take a moment to let you know about a budget cut situation that is unfortunately much more critical than our own.

The state of Massachusetts is trying to cut the budget of the Massachusetts Department of Mental Health (DMH).

It is safe to say that you, a relative or a close friend has been to a psychiatrist (shrink) at one time in your life. Why did you go? Perhaps you were confused, depressed or unable to cope.

My point is that you needed mental assistance at some time, although you might consider yourself sane. It was important that you received the help you needed.

Imagine how important psychological assistance must be to a mentally ill person. What if you were sick and desperately needed medication, but the government took all your money away so you could not afford to buy it?

This is the situation that the mentally ill people of Massachusetts are facing today. If the state's Ways and Means Committee votes to cut the DMH budget, many mentally ill people will be denied essential medication and counseling.

The tragedy of this situation is that these people did not ask to be mentally ill. They are frightened by their sickness and they cannot defend themselves. Most mentally ill people are too sick to stand up for their rights or too afraid of crowds and people to speak out.

Lavinia Gammon

I attended a rally at the State House in Boston on March 31 for the mentally ill. Only about 100 people showed up because nobody cares about the mentally ill and the mentally ill were not able to come themselves.

I was blown away by the mentally ill people who did come out and speak at the rally. They were extremely candid and brave. Many of the speakers put aside their fears for this one moment so they could say "stop these cuts!"

It was heart-wrenching to see these people, who struggle everyday to live their lives, being forced to come out and beg the government not to take away the little support this state gives them.

These people were not asking for fancy houses, cars or a luxurious lifestyle. They were merely asking not to be denied the few things that hold their lives together.

Susan Cook, a mentally ill person who spoke at Saturday's rally, said, "We need this money. We have to survive in this world. Many of us are not able to work. We need to be helped so that someday we can help ourselves."

These people must be heard and protected.

Please, if you have any compassion, take a few moments of your time and write to your legislator stating your outrage at the tragedy of the lives of the mentally ill.

We spoke out for our education. Now, we need to speak out for our fellow citizens.

Tell your legislator that you oppose the cuts to the DMH. Take one minute to save someone's life.

This crisis is not in the Middle East or Africa. It is here in our communities, and it has to be seen, heard and helped.

This Summer, Study in the Middle of the Pacific Ocean

University of Hawaii at Manoa

With its unique location in the middle of the Pacific, the University of Hawaii at Manoa is a meeting place between east and west. Minutes away from campus is a diverse community which offers an array of social, cultural, and recreational activities, all in a setting of tropical excitement and beauty.

Summer Session 1990 includes over 1000 academic courses, some not available anywhere else. In addition, there are many exceptional institutes and a myriad of extracurricular activities for students, teachers and other professionals.

Classes are offered during two main six-week sessions: May 21 to June 29 and July 2 to August 10. Many other courses and institutes with varied durations and starting dates are also offered.

During the summer, tuition for credit courses is $55 per credit hour for Hawaii residents and $110 per credit hour for nonresidents. On-campus housing is available in the University's dormitories and apartment units.

Take advantage of the opportunity to study in this rich cultural setting in the heart of urban Honolulu.

Tacky turtles take over trendoids

By DIANE HICKS
Collegian Staff
and ADRIAN LIND
Collegian Correspondent

It seems the best indicators of trends in consumerism and consumption can be found in film. Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles is a prime example. As a simple-minded flick without plot or developed character relationships, it succeeds in drawing the masses, adults and children alike. This is interesting since the film obviously has problems in defining a target audience. Like many children's films, it lacks a developed or interesting plot, yet adult-oriented jokes line the narrative, leaving children confused.

The story revolves around the education of four talking turtles and their relationship with the paternalistic rat who found them as babies in a radioactive puddle.

With this, focus falls on the fighting between good and bad Ninja camps, the stereotypical damsel in distress who assumes the modern day role of television news reporter and a lingering mystery from the past.

Ha. There was no mystery. This film is ridiculously predictable and obviously geared to a very young audience. If this is the case, and it must be since the theater was spilling over with screaming spoiled brats run amok when we viewed the film, the message is a negative one.

The film glamorizes violence through light-hearted, playful fighting and invincibility of the good, in this case the keenly costumed turtles.

At one point, the turtle called Raphael is standing alone when jumped by a group of enemy Ninja's. This is cross-edited with his brothers making jokes at home. They say Raphael does this all the time, and comment that he is bound to drop in shortly, just as he is tossed through their glass roof.

This effect waters down the drama, drawing attention away from the painful reality of an attack, in effect making the violence no big deal. For an adult audience this technique strips away suspense, for children the message is desensitizing.

With an undefined audience this film draws viewers in cult proportions. Don't believe the hype — the video game, action figures, cereal, and motion picture. Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles are trendy. So what?

The film lacks artistic passion, which should be the basic ingredient in any film. The story lies dead in the water, slowly decomposing. It is not compelling in any way, and we failed to feel uplifted or moved by anything this movie had to offer.

The grave art of B. Graves

"16 B GRAVES," a combined show of three UMass artists, will open this Thursday, April 5, at 5 p.m. at the Wheeler Gallery. The trio lived together at 16 B Graves Avenue in Northampton, an area notoriously known as the UMass slum. "Most of this artwork is in some sense an extension of the work we were doing over the summer," said Kerista Smith, a junior art major. The work is a combination of collage, assemblage, and Xerox manipulation.

Frank Cordes, a junior art major, whose collage work has been published recently in the Perkins Press, has built several three-dimensional assemblages for the exhibit. "I've taken text from advertisments, blown them up with a Xerox, and integrated them with my paintings in order to turn them into commands or icons," he said in a breathy tone during a recent interview.

Cordes' use of such props as a cast iron gun mounted on one painting and his dramatic use of vibrant yet obnoxious neon color conjure a sense of absurdity in the viewer. Of the work with the gun, Cordes says "It's a memorial to the kids killed in gang violence in inner-city Boston."

Kerista Smith's work deals mainly with feminist and animal rights issues. A major painting of her's is a statement about the 15 women shot to death in Montreal last December by a killer who, according to Smith, "looked like Rambo..." Smith works with acrylic assemblage paintings.

Ben Bennet, a junior STPEC major, works with Xerox manipulations and assemblage sculpture. "Tell everyone there will be free food at the opening," he said.

Drama on MUA

By LINDA WOODS
Collegian Staff

Every Thursday from 2-3 p.m., WMUA 91.1 FM fills the airwaves with the dark, alternative world of "Works in Progress" by radio dramatist Joe Frank. It can't be denied that the term "radio drama" carries with it some negative connotations. Frank, who is based in Venice, CA, paradoxically describes the concept of radio drama as "artificial, and the minute one comes on, I can tell I'm listening to a radio play and must suspend my disbelief to enjoy it." Frank adds, "I don't want my audience to have to suspend their disbelief. I want them to wonder what the hell is going on. Is this real or not?"

Picture driving down the street, turning your radio dial and arriving at the sound of a woman's voice cleary coming through a telephone receiver. She is describing the most bitter and intimate details of a love relationship gone bad.

Entitled, "Thank You. You're Beautiful," the idea for this episode emerged when Frank asked an actress if she had ever been in love with someone she now despised. She had. He told her to "imagine he's on the phone and go over the relationship."

You listen and you are temporarily unable to change the channel or turn it off (at least I couldn't). There is something in her honest and hypnotic voice that leaves a listener feeling a little voyeuristic.

Then, Frank slowly rubs away the line between fact and fiction as he interrupts the woman's testament with absurdist phrases such as, "I'm sitting in a cafe in Paris, revolted by the roots of a chestnut tree," a quote drawn from the novel Nausea by Jean Paul Sartre.

Frank declares, "I'm not an academic," although he attended the prestigious Iowa Writers Workshop and taught at a private school in Manhattan. He adds, "I'd say that Dostoyevsky — particularly his Notes from the Underground — Kafka's short stories and Thomas Mann's The Magic Mountain have been more an influence on me than anything."

Frank has been compared to film directors Ingmar Bergman, Federico Fellini and Woody Allen, writers Franz Kafka and Raymond Chandler and the comedy group, The Firesign Theatre.

Frank's weavings of comedy and tragedy are apt to leave a listener a little numb. It is hard to tell when to laugh or cry. The main character in the episode "Warheads" is a "little terrorist" who complains to the big terrorists in a whining voice, "You don't help me. You criticize me. I have no one to talk to. I have no one to tell me: hey, you killed eight. Hey, you killed four. You maimed sixteen. I don't have anyone to talk to. I can't tell my wife."

In Frank's world, this terrorist who proudly describes the psychological warfare he has been practicing on his son, spends his time whining. The contrast Frank presents is dark, strange and hilarious.

It is no surprise that "Works in Progress" is syndicated in 13 major cities, was added to the National Public Radio network and, since its debut in 1986, has developed a devout cult following. One afficianado is DJ Jason Bentley who airs Joe Frank on his show "Nomad," which features progressive world music.

Bentley says, "I respect Joe Frank because he is broadening people's understanding of radio by making them ask, 'What the hell?' We are both dedicated to presenting an alternative to what is found in the vast wastelands of commercial radio."

Rudolph's Love at Large big on intrigue

By GEORGE LENTZ
Collegian Staff

Love At Large is Alan Rudolph's wonderfully realized and intricately layered satire of love, patterned after an old '50s style, film noir. The film is an intriguing and often absurd statement that manages some interesting insights on human relationships.

It all starts when gravely-voiced private eye Tom Berenger is called by the alluring Anne Archer to the Blue Danube Club for his services. Archer wants him to follow a man, a charming but dangerous man (Neil Young in a cameo) she suspects of cheating on her.

After providing a vague description of Berenger's quarry, "...six feet tall, dark-rimmed glasses, smells nice..." she disappears into the night. Unfortunately, someone else at the club fits the description and Berenger pursues, unaware that he, too, is being trailed by Elizabeth Perkins, hired by his violently suspicious girlfriend.

Berenger's faulty assumption leads him on the trail of bigamist Ted Levine who splits his time between his unassuming suburban wife (Annette O'Toole) and his less-than-assuming country wife (Kate Capshaw). When Capshaw finds him out, Levine crumbles under his own confused feelings. In fact, it's Levine's inability to understand his own behavioral motivations that ultimately draws the story together.

The irony emèrges as Berenger's pursuit of Levine draws parallels with his own confused feelings when he falls for Perkins. He isn't sure why he's drawn to her, but he suspects it may be love. Through the element of "pursuit," Randolph ties the underlying irony of the film together. We all pursue love but so few of us ever come up with an understanding of it.

THE SCREENING ROOM

In Love At Large, the characters are either watching or being watched without ever really knowing what it is they're supposed to be looking for. Even after Berenger has solved the case and prepares to make love with Perkins, she asks, "What do we do now?" When Berenger shrugs and responds, "I don't know," the ultimate irony is revealed — he's solved the case but not the mystery.

Love At Large is an odd film that plays like a lighter version of the Coen brother's Blood Simple. It's got all the atmospheric elements of classic film noir plus the sly underhandedness of good satire. Our pleasure comes from Rudolph's stylized effort to get us to take a light-hearted look at mankind's monumental mystery.

FILM NOTES: Film critic Michael Blowen of the Boston Globe recently ran a listing of the 10 Greatest Films of All Time as determined by an international panel of film scholars. The poll appeared in a "recent" issue of Sight and Sound but Blowen failed to mention which issue. Anyway, here's the list:

1)Citizen Kane
2)Rules of the Game
3)Potemkin
4)Rashomon
5)Wild Strawberries
6)Modern Times
7)Magnificent Ambersons
8)The Bicycle Thief
9)The Searchers
10)L'Avventura

One-Eyed Jake to play Katina's

One-Eyed Jake, a rock and roll/blues band described by guitarist Steve Brenner as a cross between Aerosmith and The Blues Brothers, will be performing at Katina's tonight. The band, winners of last semester's Southwest Battle of the Bands, will put on a show consisting of a mixture of both cover tunes and originals.

The band members; Brenner, Bob Mullens (vocals/bass), Tom McGrath (drums/harp), and Aurum Heafitz (sax) all contribute to both the lyrics and the music of their tunes. They have been together for nearly two years, practicing in the basement of their house and playing local gigs. Brenner said the band has appeared at Katina's once before (last Valentine's Day) and also performed at the Hatch, many local parties and a SWAG funciton. Their long term goals, however, extend far beyond the Pioneer Valley.

This summer, Brenner said in a phone interview, One-Eyed Jake will be the house band at a brand new club opening in Orlando, Florida. "Its so new," he said, "that it doesn't even have a name yet."

The co-owner of this club works for Capitol Records and liked the band's first demo tape enough to ask for a second. Brenner and the other band members are hoping that a future record contract will be the result of the summer's work. For now though, their local schedule is keeping them more than busy. Those who can't catch them tonight can see their show at the Hadley Pub on Friday night or one of the two performances at Smith College on Saturday.

Authors Newman and McCauley speak for GLB Week

By TROY CASCIA
Collegian Correspondent

Local author Leslea Newman and Boston-based author Stephen McCauley read from some of their works Monday night, marking the end of Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Awareness Week.

Newman, a resident of Northampton, read her short story "A Letter to Harvey Milk" from her collection of the same name, as well as a new short story "Right Off the Beat" from a collection called Secrets, to be published next month.

Newman said she describes herself as lesbian and Jewish, or Jewish and lesbian "depending on how she's feeling," and said most of her stories reflect these aspects of her life.

She said that although she writes about events touching her life, she said her stories are not autobiographical but there are parallels between her characters and her actual life.

"I take emotional truths, and invent characters," she said.

After years of writing, Newman said she went to graduate school in New York City. Dissatisfied and unable to write there, she moved to Northampton in 1982, where she resumed her literary career, focusing on her new-found lesbian identity.

Since that time, Newman has written a great deal, including the short story collections Good Enough to Eat, Heather Has Two Mommies and Bubbe Meisehs in Shayne Maidelehs.

Author Steven McCauley, originally from Boston but now living in Cambridge, read from his soon to be completed second novel, tentitively entitled True Enough. His first novel is Object Of My Affection.

McCauley began writing seven years ago. He said that although he wanted to be a writer his entire life, he never pursued it because he thought "it seemed audacious to want to write."

He began to write short stories, and while writing one story about a relationship between a gay man and his heterosexual female roommate he "got attached to the characters," he said. He decided to continue writing about them and produced Object Of My Affection.

LBGA to sponsor dance this Friday

The Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay Alliance will sponsor a dance Friday in the Student Union Ball Room as part of Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay Awareness week.

The dance will start at 9 p.m., run until 1 a.m., and admission is three dollars. The dance is open to everyone. The music will be provided by Power House.

Dances are a great way to mingle in the gay community and see what's new in fashion and dance steps (no Lambada please).

The LBGA holds dances every month in addition to sponsoring other events including a coffee social every Friday in the Campus Center.

Coyote Builds North America
Bowker Auditorium
Sunday, April 1

Based on the Native American Coyote legends, the Perseverance Theater performance of Coyote Builds North America on Sunday night was a vibrant melange of dance, mime, music and story-telling that kept the audience in childlike wonder.

The result of collaborations spanning half a decade, the five musicians, two dancers and the narrator took the audience through nine Old Man Coyote Legends that reached supreme eloquence through simplicity and beautiful fluidity through the intertwining of these different art forms.

The stories told by the narrator, Gary Waid, were the work of Barry Lopez, author of Native American Coyote Legends (Avon/Bard Books 1977). The nine narrative pieces centered around Coyote as the trickster/creator/seducer figure whom Lopez explains exists today in characters such as Br'er Rabbit in cartoons, Mercury or Hermes in classical literature, Puck in Shakespeare and even in McMurphy in One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest.

Waid says Coyote is "a nearly unfathomable marvel. Neither good nor evil, he is both a commentary on the tendencies of human nature and a reminder of the full contours of an individual life."

The show lured the audience into some understanding of Coyote and his place in contemporary Native American literature, by presenting the five musicians clad in tuxedos and the narrator in work clothes and slowly stripping them down to the amphibious skin-like body stockings of the two dancers. In effect, the entire cast was transformed into the wild-haired and shrieking Coyote; the audience could not help but follow. In the same way, the music was melted from the simple, strong drumbeat in the opening sequence down to the wild music of the hills and animals (played with an array of percussion and stringed instruments) as the cast came together at the end for "Coyote finishes his work."

Gary Waid's charismatic voice never let the attention of the audience go, the strength of his performance being augmented by the mime and movement of dancers Jane Weiner and David Neumann in pieces such as "Coyote Takes Water From the Frog People," and "Whirlwind Woman." As the cast threw their whole bodies into the percussion at the end, the audience was left with the words, "Now they are all waiting for Coyote."

In a discussion at the end of the performance between some members of the audience and the director, choreographer and production designer, however, the point was raised that only one member of the cast was actually of Native American descent. Some members of the audience felt cheated that this was the case, even though Gary Waid, the Native American had by far the largest role. The also complained that the director Molly Smith was evading the question when she was challenged during the discussion.

The Perseverance Theater, from Juneau, is an "Alaskan voice in theater, to produce theater that is by, for and about Alaskans." Moreover, the company aims to reflect the "complex melting pot" of Alaska, a state it claims has a "unique personality" which "encompasses many kinds of people — winners and losers, folks out to get rich quick, Aleuts, Tlingits, Eskimos and Whites, drifters looking for one more chance, gold rush families, pioneers, oil tycoons and environmentalists looking for the last frontier."

Sponsored in New England by the New England Foundation for the Arts, Coyote Builds North America was part of the Fine Arts Center Four Front series, being co-presented by the Fine Arts Center and the New World Theater.

MULTICULTURAL AFFAIRS

Vietnamese musician teaches workshop

By ALEXANDER NGUYEN
Collegian staff

Nguyen Dinh Nghia, the premier flutist of Vietnam, will cut his own flute from fresh bamboo to perform this Friday in the tropical setting of the Durfee Conservatory at UMass. Nguyen, and his family of musicians performed traditional Vietnamese music on March 31 in the United Asia Cultural Center at the University of Massachusetts.

Nguyen and his family displayed extensive talent on various traditional Vietnamese instruments. Tom Truong, the Master of Ceremonies, asked the audience to "imagine that you are in tropical forests and mountains as you listen to the instruments making sounds of nature.

Nguyen replicated the sounds of the wind with his H'Mong flute. The H'Mong flute contains a small metal reed made of copper in the mouthpiece which gives it a very different tone. The instrument can also imitate the human voice and the H'Mong people use it to send messages to each other.

Like the Native Americans, the Vietnamese people belong to different tribes. High in the central mountains of Vietnam, the H'Mong tribe live with the haunting sound of the wind blowing through the trees. Today they also live with the haunting sound of gun fire.

Nguyen's daughter, Nam Phuong, played the monochord, called Dan Bau in Vietnamese. The monochord is a one-string instrument which is over one thousand years old. This unique Vietnamese instrument is played by tightening or loosening the string by pulling on a metal rod.

Next Troung asked the audience to attempt exhaling and inhaling simultaneously. They couldn't. "Now watch Nguyen do some magic for you," he said. Nguyen then played a note which he held for over four minutes. This is called continuous breathing and can be done by very few people in the world.

Watching Nguyen play, the audience could see that his chest was inhaling as he was blowing the flute.

Nguyen's other daughter, Doan Trang, played the thirty-six string hammered dulcimer. Both women played the bamboo xylophone, called Dan Trin in Vietnamese, together. Nguyen made this Dan Trin and has added bars to make it louder and play more notes and scales.

Nguyen also played the picolo flute. The picolo flute of the Rade tribe is played both in an upward and sideways position. It is older than the pan pipes. Nguyen played the high-pitched songs of the Bunklebird.

The final performance featured the Chinese dragon drum, made out of buffalo hide. Nam Phuong and Doan Trang played the Dan Trin for the encore.

Nguyen and his family will conclude their two-week visit at UMass with another performance on Sunday, April 15 at the St. Joseph Church Parish hall in Springfield.

Nguyen and his family are at UMass until April 14 giving a two-week workshop on how to make and play the bamboo flute and how to play other traditional instruments such as the bamboo a xylophone, the monochord, 16-string zither and the drum.

Professor Lucy Nguyen said that all though it is very crowded the class remains open and free to all those curious about these traditional instruments. "Students have already began playing these instruments, and next week they'll begin making bamboo flutes," she said.

When asked how the students sound, professor Nguyen had no comment.

The Festival of Asian Dance presents artists and workshops

By MINU SEBASTIAN
Collegian Staff

The Festival of Asian Dance, presented by Nataraj, Inc., will be performing on April 11 at 8:00 p.m. in the UMass Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

Scheduled to appear are artists from Japan, Korea, Cambodia, China and India. Five major Asian dance styles will be performed.

Sachiyo Ito will perform the Japanese Kabuki. Kabuki is a colorful form combining drama, music and dance. Dance is the essence of Kabuki and can be presented by a single dancer on the stage. The costume, make-up and movement of the dancer evoke a sculptural quality.

Ito also performs Okinawan dance which is heavily influenced by Chinese, Korean and Indonesian dance and theater forms.

Sun Ock Lee will perform the Korean Classical dance. Lee began her training in traditional Korean dance at the age of nine. She studied dance with Young Sook Hahn, So Hee Kim and Mai Bong Lee, all of whom hold Korea's highest artistic title of "Intangible National Treasure."

In 1972, Lee made her debut in New York at Carnegie Recital Hall. And then in 1974 she toured the United States under the auspices of the National Endowment for the Arts.

Lee has also presented lectures and performance of Korean dance at various colleges throughout the United States.

Sam-Ouen Tes, a former leading dancer and teacher of the Royal Ballet of Cambodia, will perform the Cambodian Court dance.

Meng An will be leading a dancing group of four people in traditional Chinese dance. The other three dancers are Ms. Yao Gao, Ms. Shu Xu and Ms. Jiu-an Muo.

At the age of fourteen An started dancing professionally with the Lightening Dancing Troup in Beijing, China. Her basic training was traditional Chinese dancing. She has successfully performed hundreds of times in U.S. cities.

Dancing is a tradition in Chinese culture. The typical Chinese dance emphasizes the harmony and peace of nature, love, concord and the internal beauty of the soul.

An and her partners will be performing the "Butterfly Dream." An choreographed this dance and rearranged the music for it.

The dance is a love story about two intellectuals in ancient Chinese society. They could not marry, and both the man (Liang Shan-Bo) and the woman (Zhu Ying-tai) sacrificed their lives for their love. In the end they become a pair of beautiful butterflies out of the grave and live forever happily in heaven.

This story is the Chinese version of Romeo and Juliet. Ms. An and her partners will perform the dance to glorify pure love and freedom by imitating the beautiful butterflies.

Ranjanaa Devi will be performing an Indian Classical dance.

Devi has twenty years of training in classical and theatrical dance under Mayadhar Raut of New Delhi and Guru Gopinath of Kerala. She holds academic degrees in Indian music from Delhi University.

Devi has performed widely throughout India and America for many years.

Her choreography is noted for its sensitive interpretation of traditional Odissi themes. She has also been noted for her use of modern theatrical techniques within the classical dance drama format to produce a new type of Indian dance which is modern in its staging but traditional in its style and discipline.

Devi is President of Nataraj Inc., a member of the Association for Asian Studies, the Association for Asian Performance and the Cultural Educational Collaborative. She has been presented many grants, awards and honours relating to her work in dance.

Tutors needed

For the next five school days, Thursday - Wednesday, The TEAMS project at the University of Massachusetts will be recruiting University and Five-college students to tutor language-minority secondary and primary school students for next fall semester.

TEAMS will have an information table in the UMass campus center outside the Hatch. Information is also available at the School of Education (545-0945).

TEAMS provides support to many culturally diverse students such as Cambodian, Laotian, Vietnamese, Latino, Mexican, African, and Polish.

The TEAMS project runs through a three credit class offered by the School of Education and the Division of Continuing Education at UMass.

Since 1984, over 260 University students from 52 different academic majors have provided over 12,000 hours of academic assistance to language-minority students in local schools.

Tutoring occurs when tutors spend time with one or more students discussing academic assignments and school performance.

Tutors also act as role models for changing attitudes and perceptions of higher education and encourage students to go beyond high school.

Program director Robert Maloy said that TEAMS is a unique learning experience for college students. "Not only do they teach but they learn a whole world of experiences from the culturally diverse students."

College students who are multicultural and/or multilingual are highly encouraged to participate, he said.

Pro-choice activities planned for more than 40 campuses

UMass groups will kick-off rally tomorrow on Student Union steps

By DIANE HICKS
Collegian Staff

More than 40 campuses nationwide have scheduled pro-choice activities for tomorrow in conjunction with the National Abortion Rights Action League, and the United States Student Association.

"The goal of NARAL's Campus Organizing Project is to transform pro-choice energy into political power in the 1990 elections," said Gretchen Wright, spokesperson for NARAL.

Kate Michaelman, Executive Director of NARAL said, "a resurgence of student activism was seen April 9 [1989, at the Washington Rally]" adding "students to some level have always been involved, but not to the degree that they are today."

Activities will include voter registration drives on 40 campuses, pro-choice rallies on 32, the distribution of pro-choice literature, and the launch of the Hollywood Women's Political Committee, Spring "Freedom of Choice" campus tour.

Michaelman said, "celebrities are important because they're role models, held in awe" adding "Merrill Streep or Glenn Close might reach people with their sincerity and their words that I wouldn't."

At the University of Massachusetts, a pro-choice rally will kick off tomorrow at noon on the student union steps. Speakers will include Sarah Buttenweiser, co-founder of the Abortion Rights Fund of Western Massachusetts, and contact for Hamphire College's chapter of NARAL.

This rally has been organized by UMass students Mimi Bitz, and Kim Hawn in protest of recent anti-abortion activities in the United States territory of Guam.

Bitz said the bill signed by Governor Ada prohibits: "abortion in all cases including rape, incest, and fetal deformity." She noted the only exception as being the recognition of a board based on at least two doctor's testimony that the mother's life would be endangered by childbirth.

Janet Benshoof Counsel for the ACLU has had criminal charges brought against her for handing out telephone numbers of abortion clinics three thousand miles away in Honolulu, said Bitz.

Additionally, Cardinal Apurom threatened in an interview to ex-communicate any Roman Catholic to vote against the bill, Bitz said.

"This rally is an educational forum to let people know about Guam," she added.

In the Five-College area, Hampshire College will participate in this program with tables set up on campus tomorrow, and a three day student reproductive rights conference from April 6th to the 8th.

Women who have had abortions, legal and illegal, will share their experiences in a speak out at 7:30, Friday night. Saturday, activists will discuss reproductive rights at 9:00 a.m., with workshops following in the afternoon. Sunday morning, from 9:30 to 12:30 activists will discuss future pro-choice acivities. All of these events will be held at Franklin Patterson Hall, on the Hampshire College campus.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Look to the future with confidence. Your associates will cooperate with your plans if they know exactly what is expected of them. Be certain your instructions are clearly understood. Success beckons!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Take advantage of an opportunity to acquire specialized knowledge. Romantic partner may express a desire for more freedom. Someone from your past resurfaces. Welcome a second chance.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Spend more time thinking about your future and the course you might take to make your dreams come true. A phone call will bring good financial news from overseas. Plan a trip.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Squelch a spur-of-the-moment impulse to buy something costly for your home. Wait until it goes on sale. The ability to speak a foreign language helps you unravel a business problem.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Your keen intuition should be a terrific help when making important decisions. Discussing business with a friend over lunch should prove rewarding. Watch a tendency to dictate to your grown offspring.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You could become privy to some valuable information today. Be careful who you share it with. A frustrating alliance mercifully comes to an end. A mutual parting of the ways can be amicable.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Fighting fire with fire could leave a relationship in ashes; find a less volatile way! You may never discover if something you suspect is true. Pool business ideas to improve the bottom line.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Being too introspective could make you a bore. Listening to music will put you in a better mood. Tonight is not the right time to broach a delicate subject. Keep the conversation casual.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): An outsider may ask how you are being treated at work. Even if you do not feel you are getting a fair shake, be non-committal. Confidential dealings are earmarked for success.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Stick to traditional values and you will do just fine. An agreement can be reached this afternoon; help make it happen. Be candid with someone who loves you. Act on your financial hunches.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Complete pending projects and bring accounts up to date. Family members are supportive; there is a new tranquillity on the domestic scene. Make a point of getting more fresh air and exercise.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Devote more time and energy to creative endeavors. Accepting an associate's challenge will give your self-confidence a boost. Welcome a new ally or partner. An expert's advice gives you insight.

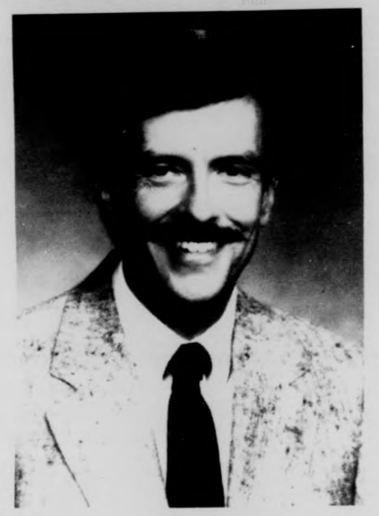
"How Come AIDS Hasn't Shown Up Among Your Friends?"



Talk with Richard Deeling, M.D. nationally recognized expert on HIV infection on college campuses.

April 4, 1990
7:30 - 9:30 p.m.
Herter Hall, Room 231
University of Massachusetts

Dr. Richard Keeling will discuss AIDS on college campuses giving a perspective on how concerned we should be, what the future of AIDS is, and innovative approaches we can take as individuals and as an institution to respond to the AIDS crisis.

Dr. Keeling is Chairman of the AIDS Task Force for the American College Health Association and Medical Director of Student Health Services at the University of Virginia.

Dr. Keeling gives tirelessly of his time to care for AIDS patients and to speak at colleges and universities all over the country. He understands the intricacies of the medical, political and social aspects of AIDS. Most notably he understands what college students value and encourages education and support services which reflect a positive attitude towards sexuality and sexual expression. Keeling also understands the difficulty involved in changing behaviors in a culture that glamorizes drug use and sexual behavior without concern for the real consequences. Taking all these elements into consideration, Keeling gives new relevant insights into AIDS.

Dr. Keeling is a brilliant speaker and an important resource for anyone wanting a fuller understanding of AIDS on college campuses.

Bruins have luxury in net with Lemelin and Moog

WILMINGTON (AP) — For what they do, Reggie Lemelin and Andy Moog are two of the NHL's best. When one is doing it, though, the other is on the bench. But who's complaining?

Not Lemelin, not Moog, and certainly not their coach, Mike Milbury of the Boston Bruins.

Milbury hasn't said which of his two goalies will start tomorrow night in the opener of Boston's first-round Adams Division playoff series with Hartford. He really can't go wrong.

"It's a major decision, but they made it easy on me by playing so well this past week," he said yesterday. "Any way I go, I'll feel comfortable going."

The goalies seem to feel comfortable with their division of labor, even though the success of each limits the playing time of the other.

Lemelin, in the playoffs for the 10th time in his 12 NHL seasons, and Moog, who has made them for the ninth time in his 10 seasons, are long past wondering whether they can do well in the league.

"When we were younger, we were trying to establish ourselves," Lemelin said. "Now we both have enough experience that we didn't have to establish ourselves. We want to win. We both understand that.

"It's not like Andy's going to come and take my job or I'm going to come and take his job."

Moog, a member of three Stanley Cup champion teams in Edmonton, said, "it's not like one of us has to play 50 or more games in order to prove ourselves.

"I know there's 80 games in a season and that's a lot of games for two goalies, let alone one. I know I'll get my chances to play."

They divided the work nearly evenly this season as Boston won the Jennings Trophy for allowing the fewest goals, 232, of any team. Moog played 2,536 minutes and had a 24-11-7 record. Lemelin played 2,310 minutes and was 22-14-2.

Lemelin's goals against average of 2.81 was third best in the league. Moog's mark of 2.89 ranked fifth.

Except for one seven-game stretch from March 8 to March 24 when both struggled, one or both of them always was playing well. In that slump, the Bruins were 2-3-2 and were outscored 34-31.

But Boston was 2-0-2 in its remaining four games and finished with 101 points, tops in the NHL. Lemelin played three of them and Moog handled one of the ties.

"They don't have problems" sharing the job, defenseman Ray Bourque said. "The guy that's going to play is the guy that's going to win. If you're hot, you're going to play."

Their ability to coexist is "up to the mentality of the goalies," center Dave Poulin said. "They seem to be able to handle it."

AP photo

Bruins goalie Andy Moog has shared the load, and the glory, with fellow No. 1 Reggie Lemelin this season.

It wasn't as easy on their previous teams. After seven seasons in Edmonton, where he battled Grant Fuhr for playing time, Moog was traded to Boston on March 7, 1988. Lemelin spent seven seasons in Calgary but, after the Flames turned from him to Mike Vernon, he signed as a free agent with Boston on Aug. 11, 1987.

Their frustration was Boston's good fortune.

"They can sit a few games and then come back and play well," Poulin said. "Not all goalies can do that. Some people have to play a lot to play well and don't want to be a No. 2 goalie."

"I can't say there's a better combination in the league," Bourque said. "We have two No. 1 goalies. Whenever they come up with a big save we say, "Thank God for those guys. They've done it again."

Rain forces postponements

This week's monsoon conditions have thrown the proverbial wrench into the University of Massachusetts sports schedule.

Several games were rained out yesterday and one for today has already been postponed.

The UMass baseball team was supposed to meet Holy Cross yesterday at Lorden Field. The game was shifted to today, but that is in jeopardy at the moment.

The softball team had its scheduled doubleheader at Rhode Island washed out. The Minutewomen will make up those games on May 6. The women's lacrosse team had its home opener delayed for the second time. Yesterday's game with Boston College has been postponed to Apr. 10.

Also, the men's lacrosse team was to visit Brown University tonight, but that game has been postponed. No makeup date has been set for that one.

Other games and matches today that may be scrubbed include the women's lax game third try at a home opener against Vermont at Totman Field (3 p.m.). The men's tennis team is slated to host Holy Cross on the Upper Boyden Courts at 3 p.m. as well.

Rob Codignotto and the Gorillas are ranked 15th this week in the USILA Division 1 poll.

Tonight's scheduled game for the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team at Brown University was postponed. And as of right now, nobody knows when it can be made up.

In years past, the Gorillas always had at least one open date during their season. But the addition of Providence College to the schedule (next Wednesday) eliminated that.

Brown can't make up the game after the regular season because it begins finals that week. So the only possibility appears to be during the last week of the season.

UMass coach Dick Garber, if it is decided to make up the game, will probably be forced to schedule three games during that final week. UMass is penciled in to host Boston College on Tuesday (May 1) and to visit Syracuse on Saturday (May 5).

Garber may ask BC to shift the game to Monday so that the Brown game can be made up on Wednesday. But that would be a tough three-game week, with the toughest game of all to cap it off.

From the lax world: There was the expected jostling in this week's United States Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association poll after a week of interesting results.

As expected, the Canadian National Team based in Syracuse is No. 1, followed by Yale and Brown. Loyola (Md.) and North Carolina round out the top five.

Other ranked teams on the UMass schedule include Rutgers (eighth), Harvard (ninth), Cornell (14th) and Army (tied for 18th).

The question seems to be this: what has happened to that power from Baltimore? When last we left Johns Hopkins, the Blue Jays were putting on a defensive show to eliminate the Gorillas from last year's playoffs, en route to losing to Syracuse by a goal in the championship game.

This year, JHU is down to 11th with a (gulp) 2-3 record. Hopkins dropped its latest game to Brown on Saturday, 10-7 in Providence.

Even more stunning from this weekend was Yale's spanking of Cornell, 20-8 in Ithaca (the Elis led 11-0 before halftime). Was this the same team that beat UMass three days earlier? Well, midfielder Mike Cummings is out for the season after separating his shoulder against the Gorillas. But still, 20-8? Oy.

Other happenings on UM sports scene

• Soccer players on U.S. teams

Several members of the University of Massachusetts women's soccer team have been selected for national and international play in the coming weeks.

Junior midfielder April Kater participated in the United States National Team Training Camp from Mar. 9-18 in Chapel Hill, N.C. along with former Minutewomen Sue Montagne and Debbie Belkin. All three more than likely will qualify for the United States Sports Festival.

Freshman forward Kim Eynard was selected to represent the United States Youth Soccer Association's Eastern Region team on a European tour of Denmark and Sweden. Eynard will be playing six games from Apr. 6-15.

Also, freshman defender Holly Hellmuth will join the U.S. National Youth Team on a trip to Bulgaria from Apr. 12-22 for a tournament of senior women's teams.

On the team side, the Minutewomen recently finished second in the University of New Hampshire Indoor Invitational, dropping the championship game to Black and Tan in sudden death, 4-3. The winners were comprised of several former UMass stars, including Belkin, Carolyn Micheel, Carla DeSantis and Michelle Powers.

Junior forward Sue Gaudette scored five goals and Eynard four as UMass coach Jim Rudy rotated his troops throughout the five-game tourney.

Coming up for the Reds will be this weekend's University of Connecticut Outdoor Tournament. They will also be hosting a pair of tournaments, inviting Black and Tan, New Hampshire and Halifax (N.S.) Resolute on Apr. 14, and New Hampshire, UConn and Hartford on Apr. 21. Alumni weekend will be Apr. 28.

• Racquetball ends season

The University of Massachusetts rugby team held tough in the second half before dropping a 15-4 decision to the University of Connecticut last Thursday in Storrs, Conn.

In an evenly-matched game, UConn came out strong early to take a 3-0 lead at the half. UMass eventually overcame that and started to dominate the match, taking a 4-3 lead in the second half.

It looked as though the tables had completely turned in the second half and UMass was on its way to another score when UConn exploded with a great kicking game and scored two quick tries.

The UMass B-team also dropped its match, but the C-team was victorious.

UMass will look to iron out some wrinkles before hosting Northeastern University Saturday at 12:30 p.m.

• Rugby drops match with UConn

The University of Massachusetts racquetball team officially completed its season this week as number one player John Gillooly returned from the Collegiate and World National Championships at Berkeley, Calif.

The team finished its season two weeks ago at the Regional Championships in Providence, R.I. after compiling a 3-7 record in the regular season.

UMass plays through the Eastern Collegiate Racquetball Conference which is the local (and largest) division of the American Collegiate Racquetball Association. The ECRC has 13 member schools, including the top three teams this season — Penn State, Army and Providence College. The top national colleges are Memphis State, Ferris State and California-Berkeley.

The team was started about five years ago and has run as a University-recognized team for two years. It is co-ed and has 18 members on its roster. Gillooly, a freshman, has been playing racquetball since he was six and was a three-time national junior champion.

This year Gillooly, in addition to his many top finishes in regualr tournaments around New England, placed first in the State Single last month, first in the Collegiate Regionals and went to 16's (quarterfinals) at the Nationals. He is currently the club pro at Winners Athletic, formerly Amherst Racquet and Fitness, in Sunderland.

This semester some of the University got their first exposure to the team as it started its campus-wide penny drive in partnership with Amherst Survival Center in North Amherst. Team members have been going door-to-door collecting pennies (or any donation) to defray cost to the team and help the local organization. Additionally, the team will be starting a recruitment process to build membership for next semester.

The fearless Cup forecast

Sorry, baseball fans. I can't be a hypocrite. I'm not turned on by the start of the baseball season.

Since the players and owners have toyed with us for too long, it's time for my own personal strike. No baseball until graduation. I have hockey to keep myself occupied.

Anyway, my undivided thoughts on this year's playoffs:

Jim Clark

Boston: A biased selection, sure. But you can't ignore the regular season success. Bourque is the MVP, case closed. Neely, Moog, Lemelin and Co. bring back the Cup, beating Calgary in six in the finals. See you at the parade.

Buffalo: An improved bunch, but still snakebitten in the playoffs. Andreychuk, Foligno, Turgeon, Puppa et al will make it interesting, but collapses are a Sabre specialty.

Montreal: Patrick Roy makes this team scary. Chris Chelios is back, but not true to form. It'll take another year to get this team back to where it was.

Hartford: I hate this team. Fans are lame (I got Game 3 tix over the phone Monday — the Garden's been sold out for a month), that fight song makes me ill. Dineen's injured. Luit's gone. I've never seen a Whale in Insuranceville.

N.Y. Rangers: Their style of play is very interesting, but not nearly as effective without Brian Leetch. Bernie Nicholls helps, but 50 years of futility won't be avenged.

New Jersey: I don't think the Devils will do it. No particular reason. That's all I can say.

Washington: Every year the Capitals win the Patrick and flop in the playoffs without a solid goalie. This year they struggled, but stole Liut. Done with mirrors.

N.Y. Islanders: Pat LaFontaine hasn't been the same since his broken hand. Losing Jeff Norton has killed the league's best power play. The late drive to make the playoffs will take its toll against the Rangers.

Chicago: Hockey's answer to Duke. Not called the NoiseDome for no reason. They have "the real horn" (sorry, Buffalo). Oh yeah, the Hawks can play, too.

St. Louis: With Vincent Riendeau as the starting goalie, life tends to be tough in the playoffs. "The Golden Brett" and hot rookie Rod Brind'Amour won't be enough.

Toronto: Score a lot of goals, give up even more. With Al Iafrate out for the year, the Leafs will turn early this season.

Oakland . . . er, Minnesota: The Stars might have had a chance if they played all their games at home. Against Quebec. Pathetic on the road, and even worse in Chicago.

Calgary: Defending Stanley Cup champions, and hockey is the only sport where that isn't a jinx. A lot of firepower with Nieuwendyk, Makarov, MacInnis. But Mike Vernon's back woes make them a tough choice to repeat.

Edmonton: Bill Ranford may have had a great year, but he's unproven in the playoffs. Grant Fuhr's injuries limit his contribution, and "Pokey" Reddick doesn't cut it.

Winnipeg: I called this one at the beginning of the season. Bob Essensa is one of the best young goalies, and Hawerchuk isn't done yet. The city may be hell to live in, but the team is pretty good.

Predictions: Boston knocks off Montreal in six (with the home ice this time). Washington solves the Rangers, Chicago blasts St. Louis and Calgary edges Winnipeg. The B's fight hard to beat the Caps in seven and Calgary does the same with the Blackhawks. Then it's party time in Beantown.

Trustees pass $638 fee increase

Drop in student enrollment cited as primary cause for fee increases

By MEREDITH O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

The Board of Regents overwhelmingly passed a series of University of Massachusetts fee increases yesterday, totaling $638 for this coming fall semester.

The primary reason for the increase, according to UMass spokeswoman Karin Sherbin, was to compensate for the smaller number of students attending the University and because the budget did not take inflation into account.

Due to fewer students attending the University, the amount of money the University collects in student fees has decreased, Student Trustee Eric Nakajima said.

"Considering the circumstances we're under right now, the fee increase makes sense," he said. "Either we cut back in programs that serve people or increase the costs."

These increases include:

- Mandatory fees, such as athletic fees, are up by $124 or 11.9 percent. Mandatory fees did cost $837 but will now cost $961.
- Room and board fees, such as residence hall, dining and telecommunications, will increase by $514 or 16.8 percent. Current room and board fees are $3,094 including a $70 telecommunication fee for the cable television, computer and telephone system in the dormitories. Now room and board fees will be $3,578 with an increased $174 telecommunications fee.

The 15.4 percent increase in fees does not include a proposed $50 curriculum fee nor the expected 10 to 15 percent increase in tuition increases, Nakajima said.

According to Sherbin what is fueling these increases is the, "transfer of fringe benefit costs to trust-funded positions. Previously the state covered these costs."

Trust-funded benefits are now funded by student fees, Nakajima said. Another major reason for the increase is the federally mandated installation of sprinkler systems in some residence halls accounting for $82 of the $514 room and board fee.

"We cannot avoid these increases," Nakajima said. The curriculum fee will be voted on by the Board of Trustees in June and will most likely pass, he said.

UMass concedes S. African investments

By PRATIP DASTIDAR
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts instructed its management firm to sell stocks in companies linked to South Africa yesterday, after the Collegian exposed these ties Tuesday, said Karin Sherbin, UMass spokeswoman. These links constitute clear violations of a 1977 policy decision to refrain from investing in any companies doing business with South Africa.

A press conference has been called today by concerned students of color and student organizations including the South African-Azanian Student Movement. The meeting will commence at 11 a.m. in Campus Center room 163. Students will discuss issues related to the controversy, and their reactions to the recent revelations.

In a press release yesterday Chancellor Duffey said, "It is clear, however, that in a recent instance several investments currently handled by the University Foundation were not sold even though they appeared on the IRRC [Investors Responsibility Research Center] list."

Duffey continued, saying: "It has recently come to my attention that there have been some questions raised about the process of implementing our policy with regard to investments in South Africa. I understand the concern of a number of members of the University community around this issue."

The press release conceded University policy needs improvement if the commitment is to be honored. ". . . I have forwarded the following memorandum to Treasurer [Robert] Brand and have instructed him to review our process in order that we may better comply with trustee policy and to institute a process whereby we can publicly demonstrate our continued compliance," Duffey said.

A memo issued yesterday from Duffey to Brand said: "We both understand that occasionally investments are made inadvertently by portfolio managers and our policy has been to put such stocks up for sale as soon as we become aware that they are involved in South African operations."

The memo continues: "It is clear that in a recent instance several investments currently handled by the University Foundation were not sold even though they appeared on the IRRC list [of corporations involved with South African business]."

Duffey continued, saying: ". . . it appears as though discretion was used by University representatives not to sell the stocks on the basis of the judgement that the operations in South Africa by the corporations cited were currently inactive."

". . . our practice should continue to be adherence to the IRRC list and that individual discretion should not be used in such cases. I am pleased to know that the stocks involved will be immediately offered for sale and I ask that you institute a process whereby we can publicly demonstrate our continued compliance," the memo added.

UMass spokesperson Karen Serbin said yesterday: "Duffey spoke with the treasurer [yesterday] and as a result, the treasurer called on the [UMass] management firm to sell the stocks in the following companies linked to South Africa: Eaton Corp., Sears Roebuck & Co., Delta

Rage in Cage over seating for disabled

By DARREN GARNICK
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts basketball fanatic Jerry Boyd said he is enraged at the Cage.

Boyd, president of Abilities Unlimited, an organization of disabled students, said he has had seating problems at the Curry Hicks Cage because he is in a wheelchair.

Throughout this past basketball season, according to Boyd, disabled students have been moved around the Cage like chess pieces. He said students in wheelchairs were seated in the corners of the building near the exits, their view usually blocked by cheerleaders, the pep band or TV cameras.

"I could stay home and watch TV," Boyd said. "But I want to be just as much an active participant as anyone else."

At the game against the University of Connecticut, Boyd said he politely asked a police officer if he could get inside early so he would not have to maneuver his wheelchair through a rowdy crowd.

The request was denied. After the gates opened, Boyd said he had to fight a pushing and shoving mob to get into the building. When the scuffle was over, Boyd said he was sitting in a broken wheelchair.

But the hassles did not end there. While enjoying an unobstructed view from the sidelines at the St. Joseph's game, Boyd said a police officer asked him to move to one

Lit candle ignites bedding, starting second Gorman fire

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
and JULIE LIVINGSTONE
Collegian Staff

Nearly 24 hours after a serious trash room fire, the Gorman Residence Hall suffered yet another fire early yesterday morning after a candle fell from a student's desk igniting bedding and paper.

University of Massachusetts spokewoman Kay Scanlan said although the fire occurred at 4:06 a.m., just one minute earlier than Tuesday's fire, investigators believe the fires are unrelated.

"In spite of the times being close, it does not seem to be a connection [between the fires]," said Scanlan.

Scanlan said the 321 residents of the Central Residential Area building were evacuated when a candle was somehow knocked to the ground in room 144 and rolled under a bed igniting paper and bedding.

The student, who was not identified, was studying by the candle when he apparently fell asleep, Scanlon said.

No injuries were reported and damage to personal effects are estimated somewhere between $10 and $20, the press office said.

The fire set off the smoke alarm in the room alerting its two male occupants who ran into the hallway. Smoke then poured into the hall activating the building alarm, Scanlon said.

A UMass police officer and an occupant of the building extinguished the fire. Two Town of Amherst Fire Department engines responded to the scene, and students were allowed to return to the building at 4:25 a.m.

Correction

The Collegian yesterday incorrectly attributed to Paul Page, vice chancellor for administration and finance, a comment that an expected $2 million budget shortfall would cause reductions in faculty. Page said personnel would be reduced. Also, personnel make up about 80 percent of expenses in the state budget, not faculty as was reported yesterday.

Week of the Child promotes awareness

By KENDRA PRATT
Collegian Staff

Although 71,000 cases of sexual, emotional and physical abuse of children were reported by the Department of Social Services in 1989, a children's rights advocate said yesterday that the figure is just the tip of the iceberg, most cases remain unreported.

"We who work with abused children know that most children who are abused don't have a responsible adult in their life who would report the abuse," said Jennifer Giandolone, coordinator of Week of the Child.

The National Child's Right Alliance of Massachusetts designated the week of April 1-7 as the week to promote awareness of child abuse and it's effects in the community.

She said children will suffer from inadequate educational programming, substandard healthcare and malnutrition in part because of the state's fiscal crisis. Abused children will lose the most by these cuts, she said.

Since child protection services are already inadequate, Giandalone said cutting funds in social services and education would prove to be dangerous for an abused child.

"When you take away programs from the school, you are taking away 'safetime,' the time away from a violent and abusive situation at home," Giandalone said.

She said that many children are too afraid or emotionally distraught to send out signals of abuse. She said society in general is "entrenched in self-denial" on this issue because of its delicacy.

On Sunday a public speak-out against child abuse was held in Amherst Common from noon to 3 p.m. Representative Stan Rosenberg and District Attorney Judd Carhart, spoke about the need for a community commitment to end child abuse.

Many survivors of child abuse who spoke at the rally said their bad experiences as a child resurfaced in their adult lives.

"People tend to block all knowledge of abuse until later in life," Giandalone said. "Acknowledging someone else's abuse means they would have to acknowledge their own powerlessness and oppression."

Filibuster delays SGA budget proposal debate

By JULIE LIVINGSTONE
Collegian Staff

A two-hour filibuster postponed what the Student Government Association and the Board of Governors hoped to be the prime opportunity to discuss a controversial budget proposal that would levy a 70 percent cut in allocations to BOG.

Garron Carvalho, BOG treasurer said he is prepared to wait until next week to discuss the proposal. "By their performance tonight, I think the senate realizes this wasn't an agreement between the BOG and the SGA."

In addressing the SGA for the first time as the newly-elected Speaker, Dan Chesnicka said he was planning to discuss the focus and vision he hoped for in the senate but would do so "in a different atmosphere than the one evident tonight."

Chesnicka said, "The way to deal with an issue is not to avoid that issue. It's all well and good to be in favor or in opposiiton to something, but it's unfair to filibuster."

In other SGA news:

- Roberto De La Cruz, vice-president of the United Farm Workers, urged students to support the UFW in boycotting table grapes.

"Students have been the vanguard of the union for a very long time and we are turning to you again," De La Cruz said.

De La Cruz said that table grapes are treated with sulfite sprays to keep them from rotting and to maintain freshness. But he said these sprays can not be washed off and are absorbed by the grapes, resulting in higher incidences of cancer in the farmers and their children, and malformed babies.

De La Cruz said a boycott creates power for the people. "This is what is going to bring the owners to the table for negotiations. Hit their pocketbook, that's when it starts f—-ing hurting them."

The senate voted to re-affirm undergraduate student support of the boycott.

He said the officer threatened that if he did not comply, he would not be allowed to return to the Cage ever again.

"They didn't need to make the threat of not allowing him back in the Cage ever again. It's Jerry's life. Basketball is so important to him," Curry said.

Paul Appleby, director of UMass Disability Services, said Boyd's experiences are typical of the seating hassles disabled students have faced since the basketball team became competitive and started attracting capacity crowds.

However, he said enormous fan interest is no excuse to discriminate against students in wheelchairs.

"They are asking for no special treatment," Appleby said. "They pay the same fee as the rest of the students and deserve adequate seating."

Seating disabled students in the corners, where they block the exits, is a direct violation of state law, Appleby said. The State Architectural Barrier Code, Massachusetts General Laws Chapter 30A, Section 6, states that the 4,000 seat cage must have 30 seats reserved for people in wheelchairs.

According to Appleby, the Cage has none. "Unless you accept the premise that the corners are reserved," he said. "I don't, but the important thing is the students don't."

Ray Bender, chairperson of the UMass Campus Architectural Barriers Board, said it is the University's goal to achieve a "completely barrier-free campus."

The board, created to ensure UMass abides by state and federal law, was "not active" when the design for the Cage's renovation was drawn up a few years ago, he said.

At the time, the Cage's bathrooms were made accessible to disabled people, but the seating issue was ignored.

Bender said his board is "plagued" with the problem of having no money to make the needed renovations immediately. An interim solution would be to move the band and reserve that space for disabled seating, he said.

Panelists discuss survival in publishing

By MEREDITH O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

"Though I love my two six-year-olds very much, I wouldn't want to turn to them and say, 'You're going to have to go to work full time to support Daddy,'" Henry "Buzzy" Bissinger said yesterday.

A panel of four non-fiction writers told a crowd of nearly 150 people about the difficulties writers encounter trying to survive on their current finances while writing a book. This was the second in the series of four sessions in the Non-fiction Writer's Conference at the University of Massachusetts.

Mark Kramer, a writer-in-residence at Boston University and author of two books, said mainstream publishing has systemized the style of popular writing.

"If diversity in books is what you want, you won't get it from the ten big conservative publishers looking for the 'sure shot,'" he said.

Bissinger blamed pressure from large, chain publishing companies to produce popular best sellers for forcing writers to produce what will make the most money.

Joe Nocera, former reporter for the Texas Monthly who is working on his first book, said the money end of the writing business is very anxiety provoking.

"The act of writing a book is an entrepeneurial act," he said. "The sad part is that people have started measuring the worth of a book by how much money it makes."

"Writers are not mythical beasts who don't have to worry about money," said Bissinger who has taken a two-year leave from his reporting job to write his soon-to-be-released Friday Night Lights. "But because of the publishers' attitudes for profit, I don't know if I can keep making books unless they make their mark."

Reporters who take time off to write books have a tough time supporting themselves, said New York Times columnist Anna Quindlen, author of the book Living Out Loud.

"A lot of newspapers are the home of the free and the home of the broke," she said.

The panel said they were confident that if writers continue to passionately produce books, they will do well, despite pressure from publishers.

College students high risk in contracting AIDS

By CHRIS MUTHER
Collegian Staff

In the next five years everyone in the United States will either know someone with the HIV virus and AIDS or will contract it themselves, Dr. Richard Keeling, chairman of the National AIDS Task Force of American Colleges said last night.

Keeling told a crowd of nearly 50 people in Herter Hall that by 1993 AIDS will be the most common cause of death of Americans ages 17 to 26.

"People haven't been seeing a lot of cases of AIDS on college campuses because most who are infected don't know they have the HIV virus," he said.

He said the HIV virus takes an average of 10 years to develop into AIDS, with the average age of contraction between 17 and 21, the age span of 96 percent of college students.

Keeling said the average age of AIDS diagnosis is 32, ten years after the average age of infection. This places a new urgency on early testing for AIDS, he said.

According to Keeling, college students are at high risk for contracting AIDS because most college students have the attitude, "It can't happen to me."

He said people stereotype AIDS as a gay or drug users' disease, but heterosexuals comprise six percent of AIDS victims and that percentage is expected to rise throughout the '90s.

Since other sexual diseases are increasing at "an alarming rate" on college campuses, Keeling said experts expect to see the same trend in AIDS diagnosis.

In a study last year of 19 college campuses, in which the University of Massachusetts was a participant, the average number of AIDS cases was 2 per 1000, but projected seropositives for a campus of 20,000 is between 35 and 40.

He said part of the problem in educating students about AIDS is the need for, and the reluctance of, students to change their behavior patterns.

Most students are aware condoms reduce the spread of AIDS, Keeling said but in campus surveys only 50 percent of the students who have had sex used a condom.

'Simpsons' fad catching

I'm a rebel of sorts. I've never been one to follow a trend or jump from bandwagon to bandwagon, extolling the virtues of all that is the latest rage.

I have never seen Batman (old or new), done the Lambada (the forbidden dance) or owned a Cabbage Patch doll. I never could solve a Rubik's Cube and didn't consider "Miami Vice" a legitimate reason to stay home on a Friday night.

Jim Clark

But I have to say, I've gotten hooked on one of the latest fads. I'm a "Simpsons" fan.

Being a college student on top of spending 46 hours a day in the basement of the Campus Center dictates that I don't get to watch much television. My only regular viewing comes when I feel compelled to rearrange my whole schedule to watch some wholesome, social and educational programming like "The Grinch" and Boston Bruins games.

Imagine my delight to be so low on cash that I couldn't afford more than a tank of gas to go home for Spring Break. Whereas my hometown is the type of place where for fun, you hang out on the street corner to watch the traffic light change — except we don't have any traffic lights — there wasn't much to do but camp in front of the tube.

Hence, I was finally exposed to the Fox network.

I had first heard about the "Simpsons" a couple of weeks before, when I was in Philadelphia at the Atlantic 10 basketball tournament. One of the players for George Washington University had "Bart-man" shaved into the back of his head.

When I asked someone why, they said, "Because he looks like Bart Simpson. You know, on that TV show."

Since then, a few people have said the same about me (I'm not sure if that's a compliment or what). But at that time, I knew nothing about the fad. I didn't know Bart was only a 10-year old. I didn't even know it was a cartoon.

But better than any old cartoon. Just when I thought you couldn't top watching Wile E. Coyote getting flattened by a train.

Although it is a cartoon, it seems more realistic than a lot of the stuff on the airwaves nowadays. A great improvement over "Knight Rider" and a never-ending onslaught of cop shows.

But it is up with the times. As TV Guide pointed out a couple of weeks ago, it is a more modern version of "Father Knows Best." Both live in a town called Springfield, except that this one has a nuclear power plant where father Homer works.

Mother Marge does her best to fit in with the pop culture. With her three-foot high blue hairdo, she would mesh with the scenery in downtown Northampton or Bonducci's.

Bart needs no explanation. He is every kid at 10, a semi-wise ass (but not as mischievous as Calvin, who has no last name and thus could never have his own TV show — I guess a comic strip is enough) equipped with his deadly assault slingshot (which probably hasn't gone over too well with the disarmament types).

Lisa seems like an updated version of Lucy Van Pelt. They wear the same dresses and always seem to know everything. And Maggie, there's not much to say, except that pacifiers are most likely the reason the whole family has a horrendous overbite.

Put it all together, and you get one generally plain everyday family. But it has charm. The show doesn't try to pour syrup over today's world, glorifying it into something it isn't.

Maybe the "Simpsons" will stick around like Fred and Wilma. Or like everything else, they will probably fade out in due time, just like oat bran.

I never fell for that one either, by the way.

Holding on to lasting memories

Just five short years ago I was pulled from the safe womb of high school, kicking and screaming. It was the birth of my collegiate existence. Gurgling and wide-eyed, I crawled to my feet, exploring, observing and learning.

Now I am slipping away. My college life is dying, fading fast. My five years pass before me in a blink. May 27th, the day of my death and rebirth. Strange.

Josh Galitsky

It is with this sense of my passing on that I feel the need to pass on to others . . . my will.

I, Josh Galitsky, being of reasonably, somewhat, kind of, sort of, sound mind and body, hereby leave the following as I pass from my life in Disneyland to my life in the oh-so-scary Real World.

To the professors of UMass, I leave my grades. All of them. I don't need them. I know you don't, either. It seems kind of silly now, doesn't it, that we argued about so many of them back then.

To the RAs and future RAs on campus, I leave my advice. Believe half of what you hear and most of what you see. Most of all, believe in yourself and your staff. I'd also like to throw in free of charge, my programming duties.

To the residents of the RAs and future RAs above, I leave my suggestions. Understand that the rules and regulations cracking down on you are not the fault of your RA. Most rules falling on you were put off for years because your RA fought against it.

To the Dining Commons ladies, I leave my appreciation. Being there day after day on the firing line of often bratty, rude and unappreciative students is your own private hell. You were always friendly, and I can't blame you for the taste of the food.

To the Theater majors, I leave you my ego and all my black clothing (I don't have a lot of either). I hope you all realize that it is your talent and determination that will make you successful, not jealousy. So many of you are so talented. You don't need the other crap.

To the Education department, I leave you a road map. You are one of the most unorganized departments on campus. I've seen so many promising future teachers get shafted because everyone gives them mixed signals about what the requirements are. Pick a plan and follow it or you're going to lose hundreds more.

To the minority students on campus, I leave you my undying gratitude. Whether you knew it or not, you enlightened me about diversity, solidarity and empowerment. I learned more from you than in any class or workshop. Sometimes you even made me feel bored to be white.

To the conservative, Republican bad boys of the Minuteman, I leave you my thanks. You made me realize that you can't be wishy-washy in your views or you get stomped on. We never clashed head-on but the more you talked, the more I strengthened my liberal beliefs.

To the Collegian editorial page, I leave my sense of humor. God knows you need one. On second thought, maybe I should keep it. I'm probably gonna need one more than ever for where I'm going.

To the bureacracy of UMass, I can't think of what to leave you. What can I give you that could equal all the miles you made me jog, the papers you made me sign, the bills you made me pay and the hell you put me through? Maybe I could just leave my disgust.

To the sports teams and the student government, I leave a thousand smiles. You both made me cheerful in different ways. One I laughed with and the other I laughed at. You guess which is which.

To anyone that wants 'em, I leave all of my notes and textbooks. They didn't help.

And to my friends, I leave all the love a heart can give. You have made this experience an unforgettable, beautiful time in my life. You were my lifeblood, my energy, my reason for being here, my college existence. What I am leaving behind for you cannot match what you have given for me to take on my next journey.

The danger of racism prevails; athletic representation shocking

As a graduate of the class of 1989 I saw and participated in many events that had quite an impact on my life. Racism was a major issue over those four years and continues to be at the forefront of University concerns.

On March 16 I was visiting some friends. Upon leaving Delano's we encountered a group of lacrosse players, who greeted us with comments of "There goes two fags and a transvestite." We replied "Have a nice day," and one of the players wanted to fight. We walked away.

UMass athletes are supposed to be representative of our campus community, instead they acted in a rather disgraceful manner.

When I left the University, I figured that blatant racism was hopefully left behind. I guess I was wrong.

I hope in the future I can visit and go to town without the presence of racists. I encourage Coach Garber to teach his "Gorillas" that there is more to the world than mohawks, beer and lacrosse.

These, however, are not the only racists, or uneducated people on campus.

I hope that it does not take another incident like October of 1986 to alert people of the danger of racism.

Shunning normal people as homophobics hypocritical

It is unjust when healthy, innocent individuals are told that they should be ashamed of themselves and are in need of help because they have a natural, unrepressed tendency to frown upon homosexuality.

People should not hate homosexuals. However, do not demand that we who are secure with ourselves succumb to the psychological bondage and impetuous drivel of the contemporary "in" attitude championing homosexuality as natural, normal and healthy.

People should have the right to do whatever they want, free of persecution, as long as they do not directly cause harm to others. This includes the right to engage in homosexual behavior, be it in your own home or on Main Street.

I am proud to say that today the pendulum has swung the other way. A good sign that people are relaxing. Many have begun to accept the fact that homosexuals have rights just like us.

Splendid! But, hold on. That pendulum has swung just a little too far in the other direction: To deem homosexuals as anything but normal and well-adjusted is to be a "phobic," a fearful person of latent homosexuality?

Today, there is a fear of being blacklisted as a "homophobe" or for alleged "insensitivity" by the pusillanimous, freethinking, "in" crowd.

If you are incapable of mating, or of having the desire to mate (regardless of whether or not you genuinely love another homosexual), you have a grave psychological problem.

Homosexuality is piteous and dysfunctional and should be so treated, and not trivialized as a matter of random difference in "preference."

Nick Wilder

Homosexuality is really not natural. Simply because people do it does not mean that it is. There are middle-aged men who spend hours every day watching pornographic movies. They do it, and it is not evil. But, clearly, neither is it natural or normal.

Homosexuality is the result of some form of serious psychological chaos and confusion. The worst way to "face it" is to say that it is perfectly healthy, normal and natural. In doing so, you increasingly repress yourself and leap further into the tumult of yet another "closet."

It is puke inducing when people pontificate that all people who look down upon homosexuality are latent homosexuals themselves.

Most "gay bashers" are inadvertently attempting to beat their own repressed homosexuality out of their victims. But they are just another group of unfortunate, psychologically disordered people.

In perpetuating this lie, you insist upon the repression of the natural and totally inevitable response of repulsion to homosexuality by normal people. This is where the line must be drawn.

You have every right to be a homosexual and to be free from violence. However, healthy heterosexual men and women who choose to frown upon homosexuality for being a psychological disorder should neither be impugned as "homophobics" or as latent homosexuals.

It is pure hypocrisy to call normal people "phobic" and sick while it is homosexuals who are ill and in need of intensive analysis. Bisexuality is not natural like heterosexuality, but neither is it a disorder. Homosexuality, on the other hand, is.

The term "homophobia" literally means an irrational and excessive fear, hatred or dread of homosexuals. If you break out in a cold sweat, start tearing your hair out and feel compelled to run out and "bash" homosexuals, then you should be called "homophobic."

On the other hand, if you accept homosexuality as a rightful practice but nevertheless see it as a grim disorder needing therapy, then you should never be described as homophobic.

Ethical resistor pays price to try to make the system work

It really stinks to find out that the system doesn't work. Government and business, the people in charge of large companies and the like who do not turn out to be the smiling, honest individuals they appear to be.

Billie Garde found out the system doesn't work.

About a decade ago, she herself learned what is was to be fooled by the system, and see that she had been lied to all along.

Garde worked for the Census Bureau in Oklahoma in 1980 for a man named John Hudson. During this time she learned what internal corruption in government was.

In the first few months of the new job, Garde began noticing some not-too-nice things about her new boss. Hudson was politically ambitious and wanted more than to be in charge of the state of Oklahoma's Census. He had many political friends in the government, and simply had many favors coming his way.

He began to ask Garde to proposition females to go to parties and perform sexual favors for visiting political officials. At first Garde did the respectful thing and ignored him. But when she wouldn't ask them, he did it himself.

He made up 'ghost employees,' fake names and social security numbers — on pay day, their paychecks were sent to a post office box where he would pick them up and cash them later.

He took the classified Census lists, and sold them to political parties, as part of their campaign strategy.

Garde first looked the other way. But finally, the Hudson's actions were out of control. She demanded that he halt these immoral actions. He laughed and moved her office to the basement. She again proclaimed that the corruption come to a stop. He had her file cabinets turned over. The internal warfare had begun.

Hudson had her cornered, though. Because he played on the one thing that she was vulnerable to — Garde was recently divorced and had the custody of her two little girls. Hudson had the political clout to have the custody switched, even though the father showed no interest in taking the girls.

Gayle Long

Because of the impact of these threats, Garde attempted to get help. She went to Hudson's boss in the Census Bureau, who sent an investigator. The investigator decided to "wait Hudson out,' in other words, ignore him until he goes too far. Obviously, arranging sexual partners for politicians and paying himself more than once a week was not enough for them to do anything about.

Pushing for a formal investigation of Hudson, Garde was fired.

She went to Washington, where she tried to get someone to listen to her at the Justice Department. Her daughters were staying with their father for the month of June in accordance with custody visitation arrangements.

While in Washington, people who had been exploited by Hudson were sick of waiting for the investigation to continue.

So they went to the press.

Garde was called, and when she verified the allegations to a reporter, the ax began to fall.

The morning her daughters were to join her in Maryland, a judge in Oklahoma signed a paper giving custody to her ex-husband. She was only allowed to see them one time, under armed guard for two hours. When she was finally allowed to take them to Maryland, she was given custody of them in Maryland, but not in Oklahoma, and therefore was charged with kidnapping in Oklahoma.

Meanwhile, the Justice Department figured that the only way to get to Hudson was to prosecute Garde. They tried to get her to plead guilty to a misdemeanor. But there were two problems with this: she hadn't done anything wrong, and a conviction would keep her girls away from her.

But Garde took a stand. She didn't give in. Eventually the lawyers went into the courtroom and Garde came out, not only with custody of her girls, but with the satisfaction that Hudson was convicted of seven felonies, with a prison term of 15 years.

But the sad part was the run-around our government gave Garde when she tried to point out the system wasn't working. And even sadder was the officials that looked away, and the other ones who wanted this woman who had some semblance of ethics and morals to go down with the ship.

Garde is an unusual woman in a time of a degenerating society. Here's to more people like her.

Show's portrayal of 'real world' isn't a size 12 shopping spree

The Mademoiselle fashion show was offensive toward women.

That afternoon they asked for students to model their clothing, in their exact words, "to offer your body."

The only thing they forgot to include was that you had to be size five, seven and nine. Most women do not fit these sizes; the average size for women is a 12.

The theme of the show was to "take the plunge into the real world." Their image of the real world was going shopping, wearing Levi's to work, going to the beach on weekends and attending a company chicken BBQ (to rub elbows with the chairmen). Whatever happened to going for interviews, paying bills and having a career and family?

People were asked to portray their image of the real world by drawing it on their tablecloths. One of the winning drawings showed everyone holding hands, "with no hate in the world, only love." Everyone portrayed in the picture had on Levi's, Ban roll-on and was reading Mademoiselle.

It was creative, but how many people actually see this as the real world?

The hostess of Mademoiselle addressed the females in the audience as 'girls.' To which Meaghan Burchell rightly replied, "We are not bimbos, we are not girls, we are women!"

Investigative reporting praised

I would like to take this opportunity to commend the Collegian for their excellent work in helping expose the solicitors who were in town, who claimed to be collecting for needy, inner-city kids and/or homeless people living in Springfield.

I must admit they had me fooled for years. I was completely convinced that I was helping children learn to read and sheltering and feeding the homeless.

Kudos to the Collegian for (helping) to do what our town officials should have done years ago.

I do have one rather small criticism, however. Having lived in the center of town for years, I had the opportunity to observe the solicitors many times. After seeing the majority of passers-by completely ignore them, the story perhaps didn't merit the front page by-line it had ("Solicitors leave town,"March 26).

But it was an overall terrific job of investigative reporting and a community service indeed. Once again, thank you.

Walkout to expand issue of choice

As students from across Massachusetts, we must come together to begin to open the lines of communication and work towards a common goal.

The issues of reproductive and sexual freedom affect our lives, and it is crucial that we make our voices heard and our power as students felt.

We will walk out of classes and assemble for a rally and festival on Boston Common on May 1, from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m., to activate our visionary program in expanding the issue of choice.

The Massachusetts Student Walkout for Choice is in no way directed at our learning institutions, but rather at the Massachusetts state governmental system.

We invite you to participate in this historical event, become a part of the Massachusetts Student Coalition for Choice, and make the nineties the next decade of student activism.

If your campus has not started organizing efforts for this event, please don't hesitate to call the Massachusetts Student Walkout for Choice office at (617) 736-4769.

The following document is the articulation of our program.

We, the students of Massachusetts, as active members of this society, demand reproductive and sexual freedom for all people regardless of gender, race, class, age, sexual orientation, marital status or ability. The issue of reproductive and sexual freedom is broader than safe, legal and funded abortion; it necessitates a redefining of these freedoms in new social, economic and political contexts. There are numerous issues perceived as peripheral to the central issue of choice: we believe they have an inherent bond. In light of this fundamental interconnectedness, we demand the following:

1. Safe, legal and funded abortion accessible to all women, on demand, throughout pregnancy, and free from governmental intervention.

2. The end of institutionalized repression of birth control research, distribution, funding, education and accessibility, and an immediate stop to hazardous testing, forced sterilization and coerced abortion.

3. The dissemination of a wide scale, comprehensive sex education program for all people.

4. Safe, funded and accessible prenatal care, alternative birth methods, parental leave, child care and nondiscriminatory adoption policies.

We will not support any candidate for political office who does not embrace our vision.

Conviction on necessity of pages

So many people have a beef with the so-called "special interest" pages in the Collegian. I too have a beef. These pages should not even be needed, but nevertheless they are (due to the newspaper's institutional racism, sexism and heterosexism).

The very disturbing editorials I read in the March 29 issue are proof positive that I was not wrong to back the sit-in at the Collegian last year. The Collegian still disturbs me.

The Collegian has interests to defend. Those who write for it aspire to jobs in other newspapers that also defend the status quo. They, therefore, resent pages such as the Third World Affairs because the page is an effort to radically change the status quo.

One can only change the status quo by taking action and speaking out. Silence can only be construed as complicity. The failure to move to change a racist society can be viewed as active racism. Those who resent the Third World Affairs page for daring to criticize our racist government are themselves racist.

Listening to George Austin, one might think Robin Varghese was racist in criticizing our complicity. The fact is that Americans have been getting fat off our neo-colonial efforts to rob the Third World of its land and resources. It is not Varghese's fault that he happens to be right.

Our failure to be concerned about what we pay taxes for just happens to be the reason anti-Americanism is at an all-time high. That is not a coincidence.

Why should an Amerikkkan (sic) citizen end up in a Third World nation? One either travels there to struggle in solidarity with a popular movement or to ruthlessly take advantage of and exploit indigenous people.

The tourist who secures prostitutes in Thailand, the legislator who cavorts with Contras, the soldier who shoots Panamanian civilians, the businessman who busts a Guatemalan union — these people salute our flag.

The pages are needed.

Enacting individual rights should not ignore others

Last week's Mademoiselle fashion show at the Campus Center promoted several beauty and fashion products. At the end of the show, a woman got on stage and grabbed the microphone to protest.

She argued against the need for deodorant and beauty products stating that women are beautiful without them. As much truth as this statement holds, we feel it is every women's personal decision as to what emphasis she places on appearance.

The protestor went on to refer to the models as bimbos. As models in this particular event, we have strong views against this woman's tactics. Although we support the freedom of speech, we feel this woman overstepped the boundaries of the First Amendment.

There are many ways to project one's views. But in this case, the student took it upon herself to sabotage an otherwise uncontroversial event.

Not only did she disrupt the proceedings, she also destroyed Campus Center catering property. She also went as far as to deface Mademoiselle magazines by pouring highly flammable and toxic agents on them. This act in itself demonstrates the protestor's blatant disregard for the safety of all those in attendance.

We believe that the Collegian was biased in its representation of the event by not focusing on the purpose or positive aspects of the event.

It is always important to review where exactly one individual's rights end and another's begin.

Beauty destroyed by ugly action

As participants in last week's Mademoiselle fashion show, we feel that we should present an opposite point of view than has been printed in the Collegian.

The article ("Woman protests show," March 29) was correct, although rather one-sided because it reported basically only Meaghan Burchell's (the protestor) view.

We do not feel in any way that the sponsors of the show, Mademoiselle magazine, Ban products and Clairol hair products objectified or displayed us or any of the other models (male or female) in a derogatory manner.

No one forced us to participate in the show; we were there by choice and did so because we wanted to.

We personally feel that Ms. Burchell's interruption of the promotional show displayed a complete lack of respect for the work, time and effort of others that went into putting the production together.

Her way of protest was destructive, immature and rude.

True, we don't need cosmetics or other accessories in order to be beautiful, but to be seen as beautiful we also have to refrain from ugly actions.

Workshop advocates career flexibility for future grads

By COLLEEN JOYCE
Collegian Correspondent

By the year 2000 the body of knowledge college graduates possess will be eight times greater than that of 1988 graduates, cited Dr. Ted Slovin, Associate Director for the Center for Academic Development Tuesday night when he spoke to a group of ten students at Berkshire House in Southwest.

Other future workforce statistics he cited included the fact that the class of 2000 will have been exposed to more information than their grandparents were in a lifetime and in the year 2000 only 15 percent of jobs will require a college degree, yet nearly all will require post-high school vocational training.

Slovin presented a workshop titled "Where will you be in the year 2000 and how will you get there?" He said he wanted to relay how rapidly the world is changing. Students should remain flexible, both in their immediate and long-range career goals.

"Things are changing so rapidly that four years of college isn't going to be enough to sustain us for the rest of our life," he said.

Education is a lifelong process, he said, adding that many jobs provide ongoing training. Slovin discussed the concept of the "rapids of change."

Slovin engaged the students in exercises which explored their aptitude, values, personality and occupational interests. He said the exercises were "strickly for guidance in choosing what we want, not for someone to hand us our career according to our interests."

Students discussed what kind of people they would want to work with, what career values are most important to them and where their skills and interest lie.

"Is it fair to ask the opnion of people in their 20s to know what they want to do for the rest of their lives, or is there room to be confused?" Slovin asked.

"The more you have a clear picture of what you want, the more likely it is you're going to get it," Slovin said.

He said, "We can choose to enjoy turbulence rather than be overwhelmed by it."

Airlines Inc., First National, Merchants National Corp. and Alleghany International Inc."

Sherbin said Brand also reminded the UMass management firm to sell stocks in Digital Equipment Corp., and Morgan Stanley Group Inc. The University identified the links between these companies and South Africa in March and instructed the managers to sell these stocks on the 23rd of that month.

Rudy Krigger, a UMass student from the Virgin Islands said: "The statement clearly demonstrates the willingness of the University to avoid embarrassment. However, stopgap measures must not be allowed to take the place of real safeguards designed to prevent day-to-day trading in companies that do business with South Africa."

Tomas Garcia, a Mexican-American UMass student, said, "I hope that this expose will start a national trend for other universities. This is the first domino to fall in a long chain of hypocricy."

Dorm fires not related

Most Gorman residents said the fires have shaken them and have made them feel uneasy about living in the residence hall. "It's affected my life, my own mental state," said Sarah Billings, a junior English major. "I feel like wringing someone's neck."

Abby Cantwell, a junior education major, said: "I was really scared. I don't feel comfortable going to sleep [in the building] anymore."

Investigators have deemed Tuesday's trash room fire as "suspicious but not incendiary," according to Scanlan.

"This means that someone probably threw a match or something similar on top of the trash," she said. "It did not start from its own causes such as a smoldering cigarette."

According to Scanlan, investigators believe that the fire was probably not arson.

Workers yesterday morning continued repairing and painting first floor walls damaged from Tuesday's fire. Yesterday's fire marks the fourth such in a residence building in two weeks. Last week, Cashin residence Hall was the site of two trash room fires.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Do not allow people who are prejudiced or limited in scope to influence you. Trust your own judgment about new ideas and people. A mystery will be solved; stay alert.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Get household chores out of the way early. Work-related financial questions may be answered by sunset. A phone call could bring an intriguing last-minute invitation. Dress to impress.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Now is an opportune time to discuss mutual financial responsibilities with your mate or partner. Keep entertainment expenses within reason. A younger member of the family may need a new sense of direction.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your intuition makes it easy for you to solve work problems today. Money can be made by giving an old idea a new twist! Go over your finances before making any purchases or promises.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Use your contacts more judiciously; be prepared to give as well as take. Try to find out where you stand with an influential associate. A newcomer could make you a fascinating proposition.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Today's business transactions will bring lasting benefits. Your imagination could be excited by an out-of-towner's observations. Resist the urge to make snap judgments. A relationship goes like clockwork.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A low-key approach is best if a disagreement arises. Do not attempt to intimidate the opposition or force an issue. It is important to say the right thing at the critical moment.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Strive to be more patient with those who mean the most to you. Mate or partner may express confusion over some personal goals. Offer to act as a sounding board this evening.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Adopt a different approach where a special relationship is concerned. Someone you have upset is slow to forgive. Giving credit where it is due may lessen an associate's envy.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 23-Jan. 19): Political differences can cause trouble today. Help comes from an unexpected source. A sense of humor improves your chances for happiness in love. Refuse to be involved in friends' personal squabbles.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Things should start looking up financially. Careful money management will be required to keep the pressure off. Work in tandem with a co-worker to increase productivity on the job.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Be on the lookout for bargains. You may have a chance to attend a special sale or auction. Talking with a young person could be both entertaining and enlightening. Avoid sounding condescending.

ARTS & LIVING

Soprano sax master Lacy a must see

By BILL ROSENBLATT
Collegian Staff

Whenever a new album by soprano saxophonist Steve Lacy is released, I rush out and buy it immediately, even if I've never heard it and I'm broke. I can only say the same for one or two other jazz artists. Therefore, you can imagine that Lacy's gig at the Iron Horse on Saturday night (two shows, 7 and 10 p.m.) is on my list as a must-see.

Lacy has devoted his entire career to the soprano sax. Very, very few saxophonists play only the soprano, although many modern tenor players double on it — a practice made popular by John Coltrane in the early 60s. Lacy is the most important soprano player alive today, inheriting that distinction from Trane and Sidney Bechet (the original soprano master). He stands above better-known contemporary sopranoists like Branford Marsalis and Wayne Shorter for his individuality and adventurousness.

He started out as a Dixieland-style player in the Bechet mold, but in the 50s, he became the first sopranoist to play in the more modern style. At first, he was influenced towards more "free" playing by piano iconoclast Cecil Taylor, with whom he worked in the mid-50s. Then, Taylor recommended that Lacy listen to Thelonious Monk, and he became fascinated: he devoted the next several years almost exclusively to playing Monk's compositions, and convinced Monk to hire him during the summer of 1960.

Valley Jazz

After his stint with Monk, Lacy found (as did many other like-minded musicians) that work in the United States was scarce, so he left for Paris, which he still calls home. As usual with such expatriate musicians, he has earned much more respect over there. The vast majority of the over one hundred albums he has recorded are on small European labels — forget finding them here.

Recently, however, Lacy has enjoyed some increased exposure and subsequent popularity here in the States. He has a contract with RCA/Novus, on which he has released four excellent albums, and Fantasy has reissued some of his early material as part of their Original Jazz Classics series. His current U.S. tour is his third in as many years.

Lacy's latest release on Novus, Anthem, features an extended title track that was commissioned by the French government for the 200th anniversary of the French Revolution. It also features a new drummer, John Betsch, who happens to be a UMass alumnus.

Most of Lacy's recent releases (domestic and import) showcase his working sextet, one of the tightest groups in jazz today. Their telepathic communication and collective daring is evident throughout Lacy's wonderfully offbeat, angular compositions and the occasional Monk or Ellington tune. The highlight of the group's interplay is the tension between Lacy and second saxophonist Steve Potts: while Potts plays in a highly expressionist style that owes much to Charlie Parker, Lacy is more restrained, building up his improvisations slowly and methodically. The occasional vocals of Irene Aebi (Lacy's wife) add an interesting element of European art-song.

Lacy should be counted among the most innovative musicians in jazz, but one never sees him on the "short list" along with Taylor, Monk, Trane, etc. There are several reasons for this, none of them very convincing: first, of course, he has been out of the country for so long. Second, his approach to innovation is more subtle and less controversial than those named above. Third, some find his obvious intellectualism off-putting: he has written vocal works based on Melville and Lao-Tze, and has cited abstract visual artists such as Paul Klee and Alberto Giacometti as influences.

Despite his eclecticism, his consistency over the staggering nmumber of albums he has recorded is quite high — I have yet to hear a bad Steve Lacy album. The common threads are his pure, vibratoless tone, his perfectionist approach to improvisation, and the amazing cohesiveness of his working group.

Go and see him at the Iron Horse on Saturday night and enjoy an overlooked major innovator in jazz.

Softball is home at last

Hartford visits for opener at Totman

By DAN SARAZEN
Collegian Staff

Last weekend the University of Massachusetts softball team was ready to play in the Connecticut Tournament. They were rained out. Tuesday it was set to play Rhode Island. They were rained out.

Hoping the third time's a charm, the Minutewomen (5-9) are scheduled to play two against Hartford today (3 p.m., Totman Field) in what would be the season home opener.

Rain. Rain. Rain.

"Our field drains well," said Gina LaMandre, assistant softball coach. "If it stops raining early enough [Wednesday], and if we get some wind, it may be OK. But if it keeps raining . . ."

If it keeps raining they should recruit some women from the swim team. Or maybe they could just change their sport to water polo and their name to the Minnows or something else with an aquatic theme.

Rain. Rain. Rain

Maybe instead of foul lines they could just put in gutters. Instead of softball jackets they could be issued life preservers.

Rain. Rain. Rain.

"We're going to play [today]," said coach Elaine Sortino, "Even if I have to hold an umbrella over the field."

But if you think that the Minutewomen have been victims of this lovely New England spring weather, then let's talk about the Hartford Lady Hawks.

The Lady Hawks' record stands at 0-0. That is because of the fact that of their four games that have been scheduled so far, all have been rained out.

UMass should be looking forward to playing today. Last year the Minutewomen went 19-0 at home in the regular season.

But alas, that was last year's team. This year's team will do everything in their power to get this home opener underway.

Sun? Sun? Sun?

Baseball journeys to Hartford

Minutemen seek sixth straight win

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

Just think, a week ago today the University of Massachusetts baseball team was 4-6, riding a two-game losing streak.

But a week can be a long time. UMass coach Mike Stone did not worry about the loss to Connecticut; instead, he told the team to put the loss behind them. Well, whatever Stone said worked.

The Minutemen have responded with five straight wins, one against Siena and four from conference foe St. Joseph's. Now the Minutemen are red-hot, owners of an umblemished 4-0 record in the Atlantic 10, and an 8-6 tally overall.

The Minutemen have had two days off, courtesy of Mother Nature. The game against Holy Cross was canceled on Tuesday because of rain, and Lorden Field suffered heavy water damage that forced yesterday's makeup game to be postponed.

The Minutemen took Tuesday off and lifted weights yesterday. Stone said that the team would go down to the field and work on fundamentals, and other various aspects of the game, but who knows how much the team was actually able to accomplish on a wet Lorden Field.

Today the Minutemen travel down Route 91 to the University of Hartford (weather permitting) and put their five-game winning streak on the line.

"Hartford is a good club," Stone said. "[Hartford] has pretty good pitching, they're well coached, it should be a good game."

The Hawks however, come in with just a 2-9 record so far. Only first baseman Greg Centracchio (.343) is hitting over .300. The team is hitting a paltry .213 compared to an amazing .361 for their opponents.

The pitching isn't much better, yielding an 8.57 team earned run average. The Hawks did only lose to UConn, 8-6, while UMass took a 16-0 pounding against the Huskies.

Baseball notes: Sophomore Lou Olivieri has been the hottest UMass hitter. He is currently hitting .417, but has only 24 at bats. Derek Dana, who shares the catching duties with Olivieri and has 40 plate appearances is batting .300. But opponents have stolen 21 out of 24 bases against the tandem, while the Minutemen have been gunned out 10 times in 27 attempts.

Lead off hitter Mike Tobin leads the team with 16 strikeouts. Normally this would be a major concern to coaches, but Tobin is second on the team in average with a .385 clip.

Jerry Creamer leads the Minutemen with a 1.00 ERA. After consecutive rainouts, the team will try again today at the University of Hartford (3 p.m.).

Drew Comeau has steadily climbed into the team batting race, he is at .355. Most surprisingly Comeau, who along with Steve Allen (now in the Texas Rangers farm system) holds the single season home run record (12) has none this season.

On the subject of homers, Brian Bright is on pace to challenge Comeau's and Allen's record. Bright has five on the year and hit three in the St. Joe's series.

Steve Corradi, who has struggled at the plate (.188), leads the club with five stolen bases. He has been caught just once.

The Minutemen are hitting .294 as a team while opponents are stroking the ball at .285.

Scott Meaney has been impressive in his last two outings. The freshman hurled a complete game shutout against the Hawks in game two Monday. Meaney is 2-0 with a 3.07 ERA.

Dan O'Leary is 1-0 with a 2.20 earned run average, second only to Jerry Creamer's 1.00 run per game.

The team ERA is still high at 6.19, but it is rapidly coming down. Last week it was over eight.

Everything cancelled ... again

In case you hadn't guessed, rain washed away all University of Massachusetts sports for the second day in a row yesterday.

The baseball team was scheduled to make up Tuesday's rainout with Holy Cross yesterday. That game has tentatively been moved to April 16.

The women's lacrosse team had its third try at a home opener scrubbed. The meeting with Vermont will now be on April 19.

Also postponed was the men's tennis season opener with Holy Cross, which has not been rescheduled. The men's lax game at Brown also has not been assigned a makeup date.

Hartford hopeful vs. big brother Boston

By HOWARD ULMAN
AP Sports Writer

BOSTON — Hartford is a poor, if not too distant, relative of Boston in New England history.

Boston is the cradle of liberty. Hartford? The cradle of the insurance industry doesn't quite send shivers up your spine. As for cultural riches, Boston is bursting. Smaller Hartford, though respectable, can't measure up.

In sports, Hartford wasn't major league until the Whalers moved there in 1975.

And, indignity of indignities, when the Whalers played their first game in the new World Hockey Association in 1972, they were based in Boston. Tommy Williams, a Bruins' castoff, scored their first goal.

In 1979, Hartford shifted to the NHL. By that time, the Bruins already had won five Stanley Cups. Since then, they frequently have overshadowed their neighbors just a two-hour drive to the southwest.

The Whalers, not surprisingly, would take special satisfaction from putting an early halt to the Bruins' drive for a sixth. Hartford's upset effort begins tonight, in Boston of course, in the opener of the best-of-seven Adams Division semifinals.

"We're the new kids on the block and we're trying to grow," said Hartford coach Rick Ley, invoking the name of rock's hot group, which, by the way, is from Boston.

The Bruins led the NHL with a 46-25-9 record and 101 points. Hartford, though it finished fourth in the Adams Division, was seventh overall with a 38-33-9 record and 85 points.

Although they've been in the same division for nine seasons, and Hartford and Boston reached the playoffs the past four, they never have met in a postseason series.

"We realize it's becoming more of a rivalry between the two teams," Boston defenseman Garry Galley said. "I think it always was a rivalry for them. It wasn't always for us . . . They wanted to play Boston and they got us."

"They've been saying, 'We want Boston, we want Boston.' They think they match up well against us," Bruins coach Mike Milbury said. "Here's their chance to prove it."

While Boston had the NHL's best record since Jan. 7, it was just 3-3-1 against Hartford before edging the Whalers 3-2 last Thursday in the regular-season finale between the teams.

If the series goes the full seven games, the Bruins would have four home games. That may not be much of an advantage since Hartford was 2-2 there this season and had the league's second best road record. Second, you guessed it, to Boston.

"We've had our share of troubles in our own building," Boston goalie Reggie Lemelin said. "The small ice surface may give [the Whalers] an advantage because they forecheck so well. We'd do better in a bigger building."

Hartford right wing Scott Young should feel at home. He played for Boston University.

"Even now, when I play against [the Bruins], I get a little extra pumped up because I know all my friends are watching," he said.

A Bruin with a Connecticut connection, Enfield native Craig Janney, isn't expected to play tonight or in Saturday night's second game in Boston. The Bruins' first-line center and best playmaker has a sprained left shoulder.

Kevin Dineen, Hartford's third-leading scorer, is listed as questionable for the game with a bruised lower back.

Goalie Peter Sidorkiewicz, who is expected to start for Hartford, said the Bruins "can throw four pretty good lines at you. They seem to have one or two guys on every line who are dangerous."

Rather than controlling the Bruins' offense, led by 55-goal scorer Cam Neely, Hartford's biggest problem could be denting their defense. Led by goalies Lemelin and Andy Moog and all-star defenseman Ray Bourque, the Bruins allowed 232 goals, fewest in the league. And only two teams have allowed fewer than Hartford's 275.

Yet the Bruins don't want to risk ruining their outstanding season by taking their first opponent lightly.

"[Pat] Verbeek, [Ron] Francis and Dineen are among the top forwards in the National Hockey League and they're going to give us all sorts of problems," Milbury said. "They're a formidable opponent and they've been looking forward to this series for months."

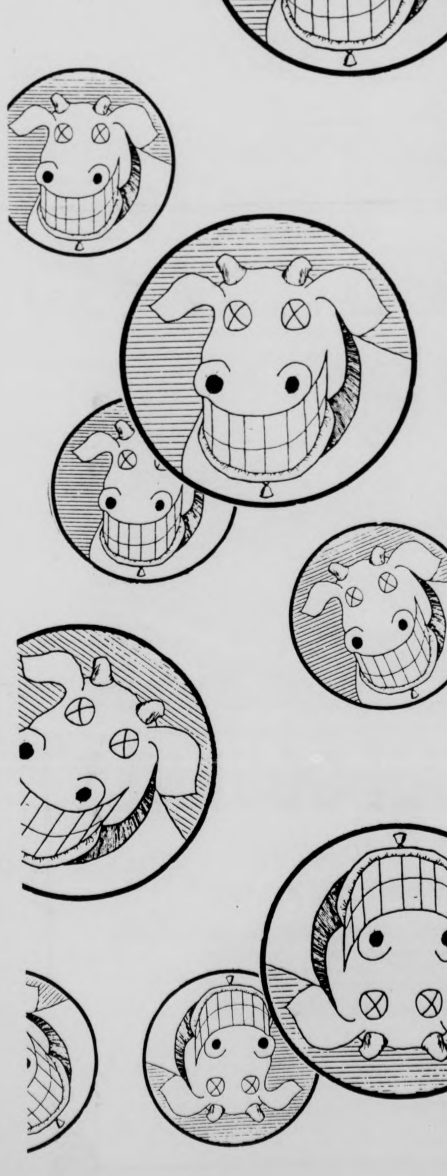
Francis wasn't so eager to start against the league's top team but couldn't do much about it.

"We'll just have to look at this as a way for us to prove who's the best in New England," he said.

THIS WEEKEND

This milk is funky fresh

By DANIELLE DOWLING
Collegian Staff



Color me nutty, but all one need do is to allude to deceased purveyors of lactic acid and I am filled with this irresistible urge to pogo across campus screaming at the top of my lungs, "Fudge Bananna Swirl/Minnie Pearl/Just You and Me PUNK ROCK GIRL!"

If you have surmised that I am referring to the wacky foursome from Philly known to all as the Dead Milkmen, that's exactly the nub of my gist.

The story of the Dead Milkmen started as a fictional short story, penned by guitarist Jaspar Thread. The farcical group was soon to have its own newsletter, with contributions from vocalist Rodney Anonymous and bassist Lord Maniac, and even created its own record label, Jerrock.

Soon the creators of the Dead Milkmen found that they could no longer keep the seed of their warped imaginations fictional. There was a need for a real band. Obligated to fulfill this need, they recruited drummer Dean Clean. After practicing together a few times, they performed their first live gig at the Harleysville Youth Center. It wasn't exactly the most glamorous or exciting way to be inducted into the music business, but at least the real Dead Milkmen had their start.

In 1983, the Milkmen released their first demo, Death Rides a Pale Cow, on Jerrock. It was followed up by the release of The Dead Milkmen Take The Airwaves which is a recording of their live performance on WXPN, the University of Pennslyvania's radio station, in 1984 also on the Jerrock label. Both of these recordings were brought to the attention of the president of Fever Records, Colin Camerer.

However, Camerer didn't enter the picture until 1985, after the release of Somebody Shot Sunshine on Jerrock in 1984, when the Milkmen wanted to record an EP but found themselves unable to due to lack of sufficient funds. Camerer gave them enough money to release a full album, Big Lizard in My Backyard, on the Enigma/Fever label.

Their saga continued with the release of Eat Your Paisley in 1986 and Bucky Fellini in 1987. They met with their first taste of success with the Fellini single "Instant Club Hit (You'll Dance to Anyhting)," a song that pokes fun at those who are all to eager to listen and dance to music by the Smiths, Depeche Mode, the Cure, or any kind of moody pseudo-cool foreign act.

In 1988, the release of Beelzebubba met with commercial success due to the single "Punk Rock Girl," which tells the story of two teenagers — one of whom looks strangely similar to Minnie Pearl — in search of a Mojo Nixon record.

But enough of this boring informational stuff, what are they like? Well, one could say a Dead Milkmen experience is kind of like watching Monty Python on shrooms while tapping your toe to a danceable beat. One could say that their music has the sarcastic, redneck quality of Randy Newman lyrics put to a punk rock tempo. One could compare them to an otter with a really mean groove and an outrageous sense of humor.

At present, the Dead Milkmen are on an East Coast tour to get everyone wicked megapsyched for the April 23 release of their next album, Metaphysical Graffiti. They're touring with the Red Hot Chili Peppers, but unfortunately the Peppers won't be playing with the Milkmen when they invade the UMass campus on Saturday night. Instead, local band Cornelia's Dad, a group with their own bizarre kind of folk/noise sound, and who have been recently signed onto the Okra/Rough Trade label, will open.

Dead Milkmen/Cordelia's Dad play The UMass Student Union Ballroom Saturday night at 8 p.m. Tickets are $7 for the general public and $5 for students. The show is a UPC production.

Roaches hunted in Southwest

By GREG ORME
Collegian Correspondent

From April 5-8, Residential Arts will present Hunting Cockroaches, a Polish play by Jonusz Glowacki. Performances take place at 8 p.m. in Hampden Theater, in Southwest residential area.

Having been likened to a Polish Barefoot in the Park, Hunting Cockroaches is a dark comedy about a couple exiled in New York City after the official dissolution of solidarity, and the imposition of martial law in Poland in 1981.

The play explores the plight of two unwilling immigrants, an actress and her playwright husband, who attempt to come to terms with the pain and personal frustration of their forced immigration to the United States. Glowacki himself was caught in this emigre trap while attending the opening of his other play, Cinders in England, during this period of political turmoil. The ac-

Renaissance woman Gilbert sings for rights

By NICOLE GONZALEZ
Collegian Staff

Did you ever wonder where Tracy Chapman, Bonnie Raitt and Suzanne Vega got this folk-pop idea from? The very start of this genre was created in part by Ronnie Gilbert who will perform tonight at the Iron Horse.

Gilbert is best known for singing in the '50s quartet, the Weavers, which included Pete Seeger, Lee Hays and Fred Hellerman. The Weavers virtually invented the folk-pop genre that grew into a movement with the Kingston Trio and Peter, Paul and Mary.

With top ten hits such as "Good Night Irene" and "On Top of Old Smokey," these artists were branded "subversive" and were blacklisted during the McCarthy era.

Even now, her voice is described as "an instrument of amazing conviction" from "brassy, open-throated sustains to the low-down lowest notes of 'Goodnight Irene.'"

A lover of changeability, Gilbert says, "I can stick out my hand anywhere in the United States and find a wonderful song."

Along with performing often-sung work, she picks tunes that are sent to her from fans throughout the country. One personal ballad, by fan Laura Berkson, is based on a true story about two young women who went to court for the right to dance together at their school prom.

In the sixties, Gilbert was active in experimental theater, working with a variety of directors, such as Meredith Monk and Joseph Chaikin.

When asked why the popularity of theater has gone down since then, she replies, "The trouble with little theater is that it's impossible for it to go on without funding. Real estate now is so expensive. All the unemployed artists would chip in and rent lofts, but that's impossible now."

More optimistically, she says, "There's a famous one out now called the San Fransisco Mime Troupe. They're touring now with a performance on Palestinians and Israelis. Groups like that survive with grants. Groups like that will be going on forever."

Brought up from a family of New York labor organizers, her involvement in politics has been constantly demonstrated. Her efforts have supported AIDS awareness, anti-apartheid movement and especially women's rights.

When asked what cause she is most currently involved with, she quickly replies, "Pro-choice. Giving all the rights to fetuses and not women is ridiculous. Have you read The Handmaid's Tale? It could really happen."

With so much experience in music, theater and politics, it is only expected that Gilbert's audiences are as wide ranged as she is. "I look out and see grey-haired couples next to women couples next to punk kids with hair in many colors — it's really something!"

Ronnie Gilbert performs tonight at the Iron Horse. The show, presented by Clay Lady Productions, begins at 7 p.m. Tickets are $11.

On a mission for Asian American rights

By ANTONIA MAGUIRE
Collegian Staff

The San Francisco based Asian American Theater Company comes to the Bowker Auditorium on Saturday, in a performance entitled I'm on a Mission From Buddha. The last in their series this semester, the show will be presented by the New World Theater at the UMass.

I'm On A Mission From Buddha is a new work by Lane Nishikawa which documents the contemporary Asian-American experience in America. It is also a fast paced sequel to Nishikawa's Life In The Fast Lane, which was presented by NWT during the fall 1984 season.

In this one man show, Nishikawa paints a laser-sharp panorama of Asian-America from the 1980s right through to this decade. Pieces within the work include "J-Town," "The Place To Get Down," "Musashi Is a Miracle," "The 442nd," "Open Season," "The Comic" and "Born Again Buddhaheads," — all one man skits and sketches in different genres.

Lane Nishikawa is the associate artistic director of the Asian American Theater Company and has been involved in over 30 productions for the AATC as an actor, writer and director. Most recently he appeared as Johnny in the world premiere production of Sansei, a musical theatrical production in conjunction with Hiroshima, the jazz fusion band, at the Mark Taper Forum in Los Angeles.

I'm On a Mission From Buddha will be performed on Saturday, April 7 at 8 p.m. in the Bowker Auditorium. Tickets, available at the Fine Arts Center Box Office, are $5 for general public and $3 for students. Call 545-2511 for more information. The Bowker Auditorium is wheelchair accessible.

■ "Hunting Cockroaches"

tion takes place in an unimpressive and shabby Lower East Side Manhattan apartment where the two intellectuals, victims of insomnia, spend their nights pondering the series of events which brought them to this particular situation. The cockroaches, which invade their privacy are also a cypher for the memories they have to combat in their minds. These cockroaches emerge from under the bed as immigration officers, KGB agents, socialite socialists and neighborhood bums. Their fear and anxiety over lack of green cards and falsified documents is manifested when immigration officers raid the Statue of Liberty and arrest their friend Zbyszek and a Turk, in the torch. Janus Glowacki is a Polish writer with a considerable reputation. He is author of six plays (including Cinders and Fortinbras Drunk), books, 20 radio plays and four produced screenplays. His novel, Give Us This Day, about the birth of solidarity, was banned by the Polish censor, became an underground best-seller and was published in the United States by St. Martin's Press in 1985.

Originally produced in Woodstock, NY, this area presentation is being produced by Sondra Radash and directed by Stan Radash with lead roles played by Peggy Kennedy and Alan Morse. Tickets are available at the Jones Library in Amherst.

Hunting Cockroaches plays at UMass Hampden Theatre in Southwest tonight through Sunday. Tickets are $6 general public, $4 for students and senior citizens.

Students irate at administration

By MEREDITH O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts students called for the resignation of Treasurer Robert H. Brand yesterday due to findings that the University still has financial ties to South Africa.

Rudy Krigger, UMass senior and member of the Pan African Student Association said at a news conference in the Campus Center: "We are disappointed that the administration has failed to follow through on its promises to divest from South Africa... We're here to express shock and outrage that our tax dollars and tuition dollars are going to support an apartheid regime."

Students said the University holds stock in at least eight companies which have financial involvements in South Africa. The companies are part of a list published by the Investors Responsibility Research Center in Washington, D.C., which monitors such businesses.

Chancellor Duffey said yesterday though he is 'troubled' that a member of Brand's staff did not fully implement the University's investment policy, he believes the policy is an appropriate one. He said Brand will not resign.

"Unfortunately, a well-meaning member of my staff wrongly used his own discretion," he said. "I have instructed him to sell University stocks and bonds of companies on the IRRC list.'

Clause 2-A of the University's investment policy states: "The University will not invest in any company or lending institution which either directly or through its subsidiaries or affiliates does business with the Republic of South Africa or in countries with similar apartheid racial policies."

Treasurer Brand, whose office checks a summary of University investments each month, said Tuesday that the University has no ties to companies on the IRRC list and has no business dealings with South

GEO questions Duffey's election guidelines

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
Collegian Staff

Chancellor Duffey and members of the Graduate Employee Organization are at odds over procedures set for an election to determine who will represent graduate student employees at the University of Massachusetts.

The University of Massachusetts board of trustees recommended Wednesday that Chancellor Duffey schedule a vote to decide union recognition for graduate student employees,

"The resolution would allow the election to be unilaterally decided by Chancellor Duffey," said Renee Heberle, a GEO spokeswoman. "This is in violation of traditional democratic labor election practices."

The resolution, which was proposed by Chancellor Duffey, allows him to call an election but stipulates three conditions Heberle said are not acceptable to the GEO:

- Duffey and the Office of Employee Relations would decide which graduate employees could participate in an election.

"He could make us lose [an election] by making a group eligible to vote which we have not recruited or by not allowing a certain group to vote," Heberle said. "It's allowing the bosses to decide who's going to vote."

- The outcome of an election would require a vote of the majority of those graduate students deemed eligible to vote rather than the total of those voting.

"No democracy operates on this principle," Heberle said. "If this was so, we would never elect a president since only 40 percent or so of the population votes."

- Any organization representing graduate students, even one that is not a collective bargaining unit, could be listed on the ballot.

"The Graduate Student Senate could intervene or get on the ballot," Heberle said. "The SGA could intervene, even the administration could get on the ballot. It's absurd."

Heberle said the resolution is "a union busting tactic."

"We were supposed to negotiate on the resolution together before we went before the trustees," she said. "We didn't see the proposal until five minutes before the meeting. He is definitely not operating on good faith. It is a railroading."

Bob Hayes, a trustee and secretary of the AFL-CIO of Massachusetts, tried to amend the resolution to allow for negotiations with the GEO but it did not pass.

"The administration is trying to frustrate the efforts of the graduate student employees to organize a union," said Haynes.

Heberle echoed this concern. "I think it is deliberate that he wants to drag out the process," she said. "We are mobilized now and after the summer we will have to rebuild."

Duffey did not return repeated calls from the Collegian.

The GEO, an affilate of District 65/United Auto Workers, has been trying since 1987 to become a union representing teaching assistants, research assistants and graduate interns in collective bargaining for better wages, benefits and job security with the University.

On March 1, the GEO orchestrated a one-day work stoppage in protest of the administration's stone-walling during previous negotiations.

Writers recount personal tales during final day of conference

By MEREDITH O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

The six men and two women who spoke in Memorial Hall yesterday told stories they knew well.

They told stories about the plight of illegal aliens, the lives of elementary school children in Holyoke and the obsession with high school football in Odessa, Texas.

And for the close to 100 people who listened in the morning and 200 people who listened in the afternoon, the importance of writers remaining detached from their subjects proved to be one of several topics that caught people's attention at the nonfiction writers conference.

Ted Conover, author of Coyotes, a book about the lives of Mexican workers who illegally crossed the U.S. border to work, said during the time he was in Mexico he became very involved with the subjects he wrote about, living with them for almost two years.

"The men I was with had a lot to lose if they were found out, but they wanted to use their own names and I wanted to make them feel like real people," he said.

Despite their wishes, Conover said he changed some names and places after helping the Mexican aliens unlawfully cross the U.S. border because he wanted to shield them from legal repercussions.

Tracy Kidder, who spent over a year observing a Holyoke elementary school classroom for his recent book Among Schoolchildren, said it does not matter if a writer's presence disrupts events.

"After a while people get used to you being there," he said.

At the afternoon session, writers discussed the influence of using the first person voice in non-fiction.

Corrections

A story in yesterday's Collegian incorrectly quoted author Toni Morrison as saying, "The purpose of freedom is to be free of someone else." The correct quote is, "The purpose of freedom is to free someone else."

Additionally, the Collegian incorrectly identified the Board of Regents as having passed the fee increases. The Board of Trustees were responsible for passing them.

To tax or not to tax . . .
Anderson of CLT, Braude of TEAM square off

By RUSSELL SKELTON
Collegian Staff

Jim Braude and Barbara Anderson, advocates for two different approaches toward dealing with the budget problems of the state of Massachusetts, aired their views last night in a debate sponsored by the Graduate Student Senate in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Speaking to some 100 people, Braude, executive director of Tax Equity Alliance for Massachusetts, said his organization is pushing a referendum question that would raise taxes fairly in order to maintain quality services and to invest in the state's future.

"Virtually all credible solutions to the state's budget problems include raising taxes," Braude said. "Low and middle income taxpayers in Massachusetts have already absorbed a $1 billion tax increase in the last year. TEAM is asking for wealthy taxpayers and businesses to contribute another $400 million."

Anderson, executive director of Citizens for Limited Taxation, spoke in support of a referendum question that provides for a rollback of the $1 billion in income tax and fee increases passed in the last year.

The CLT initiative would also repeal any tax increase that may be passed between now and the November 1990 election, an increase that could amount to as much as $800 million to $1 billion.

"We need to downsize state government. We are heading into a recession in this state," she said. "If we increase taxes this year, then they will be increased again next year and the year after that.

"It is not the responsibility of the taxpayers to tell government where to cut," she said.

In response, Braude said, "You can't say this [the state's budget problem] is terrible and not offer alternatives. CLT is obligated to offer specific proposals for cuts."

As justification for CLT's proposal, Anderson said, "A lot of wants have become needs. These referendum questions mean voters can choose. For everyone to prosper, we must be good to productive workers."

Braude said the organizational philosophy of TEAM is based on the idea that "government is built on the notion of community. Replacing taxes with user fees [for state services] is to go down a slippery slope toward destruction of that notion."

Feminist addresses 'women-hating'

By LINDSAY HOADLEY
Collegian Correspondent

Feminist Lierre Keith said Wednesday night that sixty-five percent of University of Massachusetts women will be sexually assaulted before they graduate. This violence, she said, is the direct result of mysogynistic attitudes which are bred in the pages of hard-core pornography magazines.

Keith, one of the activists involved in the destruction of pornographic material at the Amherst Newsroom last semester, spoke to a full audience at Butterfield Hall in her lecture, "Pornography and Women-Hating," which was sponsored by the Orchard Hill/ Van Meter Women's Center. Keith's lecture was accompanied by a slideshow of disturbing violent hardcore pornography.

"The data that correlates pornography and rape is better than that of cigarettes and lung cancer," she said. "In fact, the same states with the highest pornography rates also have the highest rape rates."

"What pornography does is take every imaginable daily situation, whether it be work or family in a woman's life, and show it as an opportunity for women to be hurt and used," Keith said.

She said the amount of violence against women in society is a reflection of the amount of pornography available to society. To illustrate her point, she said that in areas such as Hawaii where pornography has been alternately legalized and outlawed, rates of violence against women have fluctuated to correlate with the presence or absence of pornography.

One of many topics in the slideshow was that of racism in pornography. Keith showed a number of slides in which minority women were shown helpless before a white male abuser.

Keith also discussed the prevalence of child abuse in pornography. According to Keith, the market is a $3 billion industry. Keith showed various slides of children being abused which were so disturbing that many audience members left the lecture room.

Keith had a profound impact on many of her listeners, as some were seen leaving either visibly upset or crying.

BOG Exec. Council irked at SGA

By DARREN GARNICK
Collegian Staff

Members of the Board of Governors' Executive Council last night lashed out at the Student Government Association for failing to address the SGA's plan to drastically cut the BOG's fiscal 1991 budget. Several governors attended last Wednesday's SGA meeting hoping to debate the issue, only to sit through a two-hour senate filibuster.

Vice Chairperson Heather Tupper called the SGA meeting "complete chaos," and said she wanted the conflict to be resolved soon so the Board can completely devote its energy to running the Campus Center/Student Union complex.

According to Treasurer Garron J. Carvalho, the SGA's budget proposals would cut the BOG's resources by 70 percent. The SGA, which allocates money to the BOG through the Student Activities Trust Fund, is trying to become more powerful at the BOG's expense, he said.

"All the money will be at the mercy of one [student government] body," said Carvalho. "The centralization of funds is dangerous and will hurt the student body."

Originally, the SGA planned to cut BOG funds from $7 to $2 per fee-paying undergraduate. Recently, a new SGA amendment raised the proposed allocation to $2.50 a head.

Chairperson Sue Gordon said she is not content with that gesture and resented that the senate chose to filibuster instead of trying to discuss the conflict with the Board.

"If you shake hands with someone it's an agreement. If someone squeezes your hand it's force," she said.

In other BOG happenings last night:

- Space Committee Coordinator Matt Messinger said that the Hispanic student organization, Ahora, will not be moved from its old office. Last week, Ahora protested a BOG proposal to move them into an office with two other Hispanic groups, a gesture they said was "ghettoizing."

"Ahora has shown by their fierce contesting of the original decision, just how important their space is to them," Messinger said. "To ignore all the support they have gathered would not be wise."

- Carvalho formally accepted a challenge from the Collegian co-ed softball team, a measure the Board unanimously endorsed. The nine-inning contest is tenatively scheduled a week from Easter Sunday.

"We'll see them on the field," Carvalho said.

Peruvian to discuss future of Amazon

By REBECCA HOLMES
Collegian Correspondent

Preservation of the Amazon rainforest in an age of environmental destruction and newfound commerce is the scheduled topic of discussion by Peruvian native Milly Sangama.

Sangama, a self-proclaimed eco-feminist and native of the Peruvian Amazon, is scheduled to present a slide show tonight at 7:30 in Campus Center room 163.

"It is very important to bring someone from the front lines who will address the social and environmental problems existing in Peru," said Mark Maynard of the UMass Rainforest Action group, which is co-sponsoring the event with the Amherst College Pratt Museum.

"It is much easier for a student to get a feeling for what is happening, hearing information directly from someone who lives in the region rather than from written reference sources," he said.

Sangama, author of Tales of the Peruvian Amazon, leads all-women groups and groups of both men and women on expeditions into the Peruvian rainforest. The tours are based near Iquitos, Peru, where Sangama and her husband, biologist Paul Beaver, run a wildlife preserve and animal rehabilitation center. They care for animals confiscated from the illegal pet trade and prepare them for reintroduction into their natural environment.

In her book, Sangama describes their unusual request of potential explorers: Both she and Paul ask that their visitors bring along as much extra baggage as possible, in the form of clothing and bags of perishable foods. These gifts go to assist the people of Nueve du Octubre, a poor barrio on the fringes of Iquitos City.

Sangama writes that such assistance is "a small bandage for a large, bleeding wound." The barrio communi-

Students rally on steps for choice

By DIANE HICKS
Collegian Staff

More than fifty University of Massachusetts students joined in a nationwide network of pro-choice demonstrations yesterday with a rally on the Student Union steps.

The rally, coordinated by UMass students Meriam Bix and Kim Han, was one of more than 30 demonstrations held on college campuses throughout the nation yesterday.

Posters saying, "Bush: Get out of Mine" and, "Get Your Laws off Our Bodies" served as a backdrop to the orators.

Speakers included Gina Gombar, co-President of the Progressive Organization for Women's Rights, Marci Lew, also of P.O.W.E.R., and local poet Kahlil Gibrahn. Gombar discussed RU 486, saying "I'm one of the few Americans I know that has taken RU 486."

The drug, which is not available in the United States at this time, acts to abort pregnancy within the first seven weeks, Gombar said.

The strong points of the RU 486 pill lay with it's oral administration she said, remarking that it doesn't cause infection or any of the side effects associated with anesthesia.

Gombar also pointed out that shortly after RU 486 was released in France, it's marketers had it removed from the shelves. In turn, the Board of Health in that country demanded the drug be put back on the market, declaring that women have the right to use this pill.

Speaker Marci Lew, in contrast, discussed the current situation in the United States territory of Guam. Laws passed recently in this Catholic dominated state restrict abortion even in cases of fetal deformity, rape, and incest, she said.

Under Guam law, an abortion is only possible when a woman's life is threatened by childbirth, she said. Even in such cases, two doctors must prove to a governmental board that an abortion is necessary to save the woman's life, she said.

Beginning tonight, Hampshire College will host a three day pro-choice conference, with lectures and workshops on reproductive rights.

Yesterday's rally concluded with a postive chant for pro-choicers: "Not the Church! Not the State! Women shall decide our Fate!"

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted

Consider ecological factors

Among the many problems that assail this troubled planet, none is more important than the destruction of natural resources — be it tropical forests, coral reefs, fisheries or the land itself.

The 20th anniversary of Earth Day, which will be celebrated on April 22, provides us with an opportunity to inform our citizens about the many challenges that confront us — in Massachusetts, the nation and abroad.

Gerard A. Bertrand

In the Commonwealth, land is one of our most precious resources. Yet in the last 30 years we have seen a sharp rise in unplanned development, and have been losing open space at an alarming rate.

Between 1980 and 1988 an additional 150,000 acres in Massachusetts were lost. By 1988 we were losing ground at the rate of 600 acres, or 12 Boston Commons, each week. The development pace continues today in spite of a downturn in the economy.

This loss of open space has placed pressures on our environment, and we are now at the risk of losing the characteristics that make Massachusetts an attractive place to live — our beaches, parks, rivers, landscapes and wildlife.

But the fact that I, like many environmentalists, am concerned about this loss of open space does not mean that I am anti-development. What is sought is a balance, and the recognition that ecological forces are factors that must be considered.

The world scene is littered with examples of unfettered "development" that has resulted in societal chaos. And while such a scenario may seem remote to us, we have only to remember that the Danube was once a pristine river, Brazilia was once a tropical rainforest and Cape Cod was an uncrowded, quaint and quiet backwater busy for only a few months each year.

Further, open space contributes directly to key industries within the Commonwealth, attracting tourists, providing land for farming, and offering woods and streams for outdoor recreation. Tourism is the second largest industry in the state, and when open-space related farm income and hunting and fishing expenditures are included, the total contribution of open space to the Massachusetts economy amounts to nearly three billion dollars.

In addition to its aesthetic value and its importance for farming, undeveloped land is critical to the protection of our water resources. Wetlands, for example, play an important role in stormwater retention, flood control and filtering drinking water. Yet massive destruction of wetlands is still occurring.

The loss of wetlands also affects wildlife. Many species of animals rely on the habitat that wetlands offer. As their habitat disappears, so does the species. In Massachusetts we have lost 72 varieties of animals and plants to extinction in the last century.

The Massachusetts Audubon Society has historically fought the loss of open space and the lack of protection of our water and wildlife by acquiring land and preserving it. The Society now owns more than 19,000 acres in the Commonwealth, from the Berkshires to Cape Cod. But acquiring land is not enough.

Regional planning, which balances our needs for development with protection of natural resources, is the next step. Development is needed, but in the right place, at the right scale and at the right density.

The state has already taken some steps in this direction. The creation of the Cape Cod Commission, the introduction of legislation to protect watersheds and endangered species, the move towards creating land bank programs, all are signs of progress.

But we need to do more, and fast.

The issue of open space is just one of many which face us in this new decade. The challenges are many, but they are not insurmountable. The 20th anniversary of Earth Day is an opportunity to rejuvenate our efforts, a chance for every citizen to celebrate our planet and stand up for the preservation of our natural resources.

We'll see you on April 22, and beyond.

Bias confuses divestment issue

To my amazement, I found out in Tuesday's Collegian that the state of Israel has been incorporated into a business. In the front page article, Pratip Dastidar listed Israel among corporations with investments in South Africa. He does not list Israeli companies, but he indicts the entire state of Israel for trade with the Republic of South Africa (RSA).

There are corporations within Israel that trade with the RSA. The Israeli government has economic and military ties with South Africa, but they have been steadily phasing out ties with the RSA since 1987. But I ask why Israel alone is mentioned when it is only one among many nations who trade with South Africa?

The article compares the UMass Investment Portfolio to lists of businesses that trade with South Africa. But according to the Treasury Office, the few Israeli bonds that UMass holds are not part of the Investment Portfolio, but rather in the current fund. The assets are listed in the bond portfolio along with U.S. and Canadian bonds.

If we do consider the bonds and divest from nations on the basis of their South African ties, we should start locally with UMass investments in the U.S. government. According to the U.S. Commerce Department, the U.S. accumulated imports to the amount of 1.6 billion dollars from the RSA in 1988 as well as 1.7 billion dollars worth of exports.

These figures make the U.S. one of the RSA's largest trading partners. UMass invests in U.S. Treasury notes and bonds almost daily, comprising 60 percent of the UMass bond portfolio. If Canadian and U.S. bonds also appear in the portfolio, why has Israel been singled out?

The media has never been unbiased about Israel. Already complex and confused, subtle propaganda against Israel does not help anyone understand the issues. If one wants to condemn one nation for ties to South Africa, one must condemn them all.

Collegiate journalism should not be used as a political tool by anyone, nor should it unfairly condemn Israel for world problems. We are angered by the Collegian's lack of discretion, and hope your judgment will improve in the future.

Experiencing the effects of racism

Some white people are under the illusion that racism is a thing of the past. This is because white people do not have to deal with the effects of racism everyday.

Progress has been made against the most obvious forms of racism. For example, prominent politicians no longer openly advocate segregation. Unfortunately, a lot of racism has gone "underground" instead of disappearing.

Geoffrey Feldman

Blatant racism is replaced by more subtle racism. It is still true that if you are African-American, you have to deal with racism on a regular basis. African-Americans are treated as suspicious characters solely because of the color of their skin.

In stores, security personnel pay more attention to African-American shoppers. Police are more likely to stop and question and search an African-American person.

I read in the Boston Globe about an unusual policy of a Store-24 in Boston. The store, which was near a high school, had adopted a policy of not serving students before noon.

Since the store is in a predominantly white neighborhood and the school is predominantly African-American, it is not hard to guess the real reason for this policy.

The Globe's reporter witnessed that the policy was strictly enforced for African-American students, but that some white students were allowed to enter the store.

Racism in the media is also a serious problem. Much of the racism is subtle, however. I read the Boston Globe regularly, and have come to notice that whenever a feature article appears about a social problem, it seems to print a photo of an African-American.

Very recently, in an article about homeless teenage parents, it was said that most homeless teenage parents are white. But the Globe still printed a photo of an African-American.

I remember another similar incident on a special news segment on domestic violence, where two cases were shown about men accused and confronted of abuse by police. In each case, the man was African-American.

This gives viewers the impression that domestic violence is a "black problem," when in fact nothing could be further from the truth.

There is a kind of vicious circle where social problems in the minority community are not seen as a result of racism but rather as a justification of unequal treatment.

White victims of crime tend to get more press attention. A classic example is the infamous Stuart case. October 23, 1989 was a tragic day for Boston, as two people were murdered, Carol Stuart and James Moody.

The murder of Stuart, a white, was the top story for the Boston Globe, with follow-up stories on the front page every day for about a week. The murder of Moody, an African-American, was largely ignored.

When finally, after a week, the Globe printed a story about him, the question was raised as to whether Moody had a criminal record or had been involved in illicit activity. No such questions were raised about Stuart, although in retrospect it appears that they should have been.

A study has shown that racist patterns also exist among sports broadcasters, who tend to praise white athletes for their intelligence while pointing out the mistakes of African-American athletes.

African-Americans are only cited for their "natural" physical abilities while whites are praised for their hustle, determination, leadership, etc.

I remember Tom Seaver saying in last year's All-Star Game that "Carl Ripkin does not have the natural ability of Ozzie Smith, but he is an intelligent player who knows how to play the hitters."

Ripkin is white. Smith is black. Also animal metaphors ("He has racehorse speed," "The little monkey gets open") tend to be used to describe African-Americans.

Egocentric opinion reveals homophobia

Is it unjust when healthy, innocent individuals are told they should be ashamed of themselves and are in need of help because they have a natural, unoppressed attraction to a person of the same sex?("Shunning normal people as homophobic hypocritical," April 5)

People should not hate homosexuals. Do not demand that we, who are secure with ourselves, succumb to your ignorant attitude as our homosexuality is natural, normal and healthy.

"People should have the right to do whatever they want, free of persecution, as long as they do not directly cause harm to others. This includes the right to homosexual behavior, be it in your own home or on Main Street."

I agree with you fully in this remark, and for a moment I saw a glimmer of enlightenment. But as I read on I was disappointed, even outraged, at what I read. It is attitudes perpetuated in moronic editorials such as yours, that does not allow homosexuals to be free of persecution.

Your attitude is piteous and dysfunctional and should be treated! Homosexuality is not "a result of some form of serious psychological chaos and confusion." Rather, it is coming to terms with your true inner feelings. Perhaps you should take time to explore some of your inner feelings.

It is truly puke-inducing when people such as yourself look down upon homosexuality as abnormal.

I have every right to be a homosexual and to be free from violence. However, heterosexual men and women who choose to make my life uncomfortable need to take a close look at themselves. Why can't you leave us alone and let us live our lives? Better yet, why don't you grow up a little and drop all of your homophobic bull — and be my friend?

How can you say that bisexuality is not a disorder when you say that homosexuality is? Could this be a justification of your own actions?

As long as people such as yourself continue to shove your biased egocentric opinions in our faces, you will be described as "homophobic" because that is exactly what you are as evidenced by your editorial!

Henry "Buzzy" Bissinger who spent over a year in Odessa, Texas to write about a high school football team said: "I didn't want the book to be about me, it's not my story. It's the story of six kids going through high school where football is the most important thing in their lives."

New York Times columnist Anna Quindlen said she realized how much of an impact using the first person has when a reader clipped out one of her columns and circled every "I" in red pen.

Another issue writers discussed was the repercussions writers will face when their subjects read their work.

"The whole town [of Odessa] will call me a traitor, but I watched these kids risk their lives for a game that really doesn't matter," Bissinger said.

Itabari Njeri, who recently published her memoir Every Good-bye Ain't Gone, said she withheld a lot of personal information about her family, although her mother disagrees.

Njeri said her cousin is not still speaking to her because of the personal information she revealed in her book.

ty is, for the most part, indigenous Amazonians displaced by the Peruvian lumber companies.

Without formal land rights, the Bora Indians in the Northeast region of Peru are defenseless against the onslaught of commerce, and have found themselves forced off the land. Formerly a hunting and gathering society, the Bora now have little option but to retreat to the shanty towns of Iquitos City, or to become employees of the lumber companies, according to Sangama.

As workers in the timber industry the Bora are paid subsistence wages, all of which must be spent within the confines of the labor camp.

ARTS & LIVING

Zydeco fans roll a 7 at Pearl Street

On Friday, April 6, the New York-based quintet Lucky 7 will be performing an 18-and-over show at Pearl Street.

Formed in 1984 by longtime friends Barry Ryan (formerly of the Rockats) and Kenny Margolis (formerly of Mink DeVille), Lucky 7's debut EP on Midnight Records was hailed nationally by various critics and called "a stomping hybrid of garage and Cajun dance tunes," by The New York Times.

"Our music is like a meal," guitarist and vocalist Barry Ryan explained. "Rock 'n' roll is the main course. Then we have zydeco, country, blues and Latin; they're the appetizers, side dishes and desserts."

Following the release of their first full-length LP, Get Lucky, Lucky 7 was hailed by many as one of the most promising, "real" and unpretentious "bar bands" around.

Rolling Stone claimed the album to be "an irrepressibly danceable debut; a mix of hard-driving rockabilly, Cajun stomp and power blues."

Lucky 7 have recently released their third LP, entitled Feed the Snake, which moves them another step towards further musical growth and maturity for the band. Snake has been described as "a mix of Cajun, R&B, country, salsa and blues that offers discerning musical palates 12 hearty servings of genuine American music."

Lucky 7 have proven themselves to be as energetic and captivating live as they are in the studio, abetted by their burgeoning live following across America and Canada. However, despite the "down-home fun" label they've acquired, the band worries about comparisons to other rockabilly bands.

Ryan stressed, "Lucky 7 is a basic rock 'n' roll band, only with an accordian mixed in. People have compared us to Los Lobos, but we're really very different. We have a brash, New York sound."

The local killer zydeco band, The Rent Party, open the show, which begins at 6:30 p.m.

Tackhead gets user friendly

By JON DRUKMAN
Collegian Correspondent

Every once in a while this job has its rewards. You scour the trades, talk via computer to people overseas who let you know what's hot in Europe and bug record shop sales staff incessantly about release dates. Once you get that hot little disc on your stereo though, it's all over. And once we heard Tackhead's new album Friendly as a Hand Grenade, we were devastated. This record kicks, if you'll pardon the crudity serious ass.

DISC JUNKIE

The musicians in Adrian Sherwood's shifting circle come together in many configurations, but Tackhead is undoubtedly their most well known incarnation. With good reason, too. Doug Wimbish and Keith LeBlanc are arguably the funkiest, hippest rhythm section in the world. Skip McDonald could play his guitar lines on a Madonna song and they would still cook. They've added a new member, too. Vocalist Bernard Fowler replaces Gary Clail here, and it's a change for the better. Fowler's smooth falsetto provides the funk vocal element they've been looking for. The band now sounds like an incredibly hip, electronic, industrialized version of George Clinton. There is no possible way to do them justice in print. Check out the killer grooves of "Mind and Movement," or "Tell Me the Hurt." One minute is worth ten thousand words.

There's political commentary via judicious use of samples, including last year's single, "Ticking Time Bomb." That's our only complaint with the album, in fact — not enough new material. But, despite the shortness, or perhaps because of it, the album has a sort of compact urgency that defies description. Get it now.

Next up is three fellows from California who go by the name Drowing Pool. Their debut album Aphonia is a sophisticated instrumental job. Lots of swirling guitar textures mixed with effected drums of ethnic percussion in a thick soup of sound. Parts of it almost sound like the Cure or New Order, just because of the guitar sounds they use, but fortunately this is where the comparisons end.

"Black Baghdad" opens the album with a tabla riff and a sea of buzzing guitars. This is followed by "Tap Tap" which uses a sample of some ethnic singing in a judicious manner. The rest of the tracks proceed in a similar hypnotic fashion, making this a perfect background album for studying, making out, or torturing small animals.

Bill Morrissey: folk's unsung hero

By JULIE LIVINGSTONE
Collegian Staff

Like Bob Dylan and Tom Waits, Bill Morrissey's music and words are inseparable. The themes aren't celebrations for parties, but they are celebrations of life as Morrissey sees it. And he sees it clearly.

Morrissey returns to the Iron Horse tonight to play the incisive songs of wit, humor and heartbreak that have won him wide acclaim throughout the Northeast, by critics and audiences alike.

He's been touted as the "Best Folk Musician" by the Boston Globe three years running, and his most recently released album Standing Eight received a top ten rating of '89 from Billboard's Critics Choice.

But Morrissey said he doesn't really listen to what the critics think. "I tend not to take what they say seriously one way or another."

What he does take seriously is his music, and it shows in tales of poignant phrasing and details that freeze moments and emotions. In "Barstow," a hitchhiker on his way back to Boston from California shares wine around a fire and sees a bum tip the bottle up "like a trumpet." And his eyes "shine like brakelights."

Back in college, Morrissey tried playing in bars, he said his goal at that point was to sing in the same key he was playing in.

It worked.

"But, I never thought I'd be this good at it though," Morrissey said.

The rest of the country, Germany and England will be exposed to this New Hampshire native's talent through a tour slated for this spring and summer.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES(March 21-April 19): Nothing could be more effective than the plan you are working on. Take steps to protect an investment. You can be a top performer if you concentrate. Resist a temptation to sound off.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20): Do not take anything for granted now. Check out the details of an agreement before signing or recommmending it. A greedy person may be trying to deceive you. Insist on seeing something for yourself.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20): Let loved one know how much you care. Creative endeavors flourish when friends put their heads together. A serious discussion about the future can put marital plans into better perspective.

CANCER(June 21-July 22): Much pleasure can be derived from a conversation with a loving family member. Someone who cares will urge you to be more adventuresome. Inspiration comes from an unusual experience. Confide in mate.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22): Take advantage of an educational opportunity. Finish routine tasks before seeking responsibility for an intriguing new project. Romantic partner may want greater freedom. Remain calm.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22): Sudden changes at work are both surprising and pleasing. Travel could be part of the package. Taking work home at night can be highly profitable. Double-check all financial facts and figures.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22): Check the quality of a project before giving it your approval. Exercise or a brisk walk around the neirghborhood should make you feel better this evening. Just be careful not to overdo.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21): An opportunity to sell possessions or property may arise. A tidy profit can be made. Your workload increases due to someone's illenss. Be careful not to take on more than you can handle.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21): An authority figure is easier to reach now. Extra effort will result in a higher income. Say what you think, but avoid being overly vehement. Encourage a young person to forge ahead.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19): A promotion is likely if your work reflects recent aquisition of new knowledge. Be more imaginative. Confrontations with an aggressive associate should be avoided.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18): Now is the time to finalize agreements. An encounter with someone from your past may leave you feeling restless. If looking for diversion tonight, seek out simple, inexpensive pleasures.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20): Dress elegantly and go all out to impress an influential associate. Someone who is basking in the limelight now may soon be out of favor. Learn to play a waiting game.

Africa.

In a memo issued to Brand on Wednesday, Duffey said, "It is clear, however, that in a recent instance several investments currently handled by the University Foundation were not sold even though they appeared on the IRRC list."

Brand was unavailable for comment yesterday.

UMass spokeswoman Karin Sherbin said Wednesday the UMass management firm was instructed to sell the stocks in the following companies: Eaton Corp., Sears Roebuck and Co., Delta Airlines Inc., First National, Merchants National Corp. and Alleghany International Inc.

Sherbin added that Brand was reminded to sell stocks in Digital Equipment Corp., and Morgan Stanley Group, Inc. The University discovered the South African links of these companies in March and had instructed the managers to sell these stocks.

Students issued a list of "forceful recommendations" for the University administration. Included in those recommendations are: the revision of UMass divestment policy, making the investment portfolio and Treasurer's list available to the public, the immediate resignation of Brand, and UMass participation in the Coca-Cola boycott.

men's lax vs. New Hampshire

Indeed the 'Cats come to town with a 4-1 record, having only lost to eighth-ranked Rutgers. Their most recent win was by an impressive 15-10 margin over a not-so-bad Villanova team.

"That's a pretty big win for them," Garber said.

Leading the way for UNH are attackmen Mark Botnick and Jeff Mechura. Botnick has piled up 16 goals and eight assists, while Mechura had 11 goals and five assists.

"They're a very attack-oriented team," Garber said. "It's a good 1-2 punch, but I'd rank Mechura strongest. He's an outstanding attack in New England and on the East coast."

The Gorillas (3-1) will have to try and focus their attention on those two with a solid double-teaming defense. The team defense hasn't been one of the strongest points thus far, but if UMass can get it going tomorrow, UNH will struggle.

"Our overall effort from the midfield is stronger," Garber said. "We have more depth at positions. If both teams play a good game, we should have a little more depth and firepower."

Offensively, the Gorillas can try to exploit UNH goalie Stowe Milhouse, who is yielding more than 11 goals per game. UMass has knocked home 86 goals in four games, including 31 in its two games since returning from Arizona.

runners off first in the course of the doubleheader.

Sortino brought Aprile in with the bases loaded. Aprile pitched one pitch, got the out and would record the win. Claffey picked up the save pitching the rest of the way, working the last four innings of hitless relief.

In the bottom of the third Dawn Albert ran for Miller, who had walked, and scored on a single by Duff. UMass scored one more in the sixth and won 3-1.

UMass is on the road this weekend and will play the likes of St. Bonaventure and Penn State. The games will be important ones for the Minutewomen.

"Half of the A-10 title is on the line," said Sortino.

The Minutemen had their chances at the plate, they had just seven hits, but were issued four walks and hit by three pitches. The problem for the Minutemen was that they hit into five double plays.

In the sixth inning, UMass loaded the bases, one run had come in making the score 10-5. It seemed as if the Minutemen were gearing up to answer the Hartford third, with a big inning of their own. Lou Olivieri who came into the game hitting .417 stepped up to bat. The UMass dugout which had been as quiet as a morgue for the past two innings finally came to life. But Olivieri grounded into an inning ending double play.

Give Hartford credit, they trailed by four runs early and never quit. Klee picked up his second win of the season while Corriveau suffered his third straight defeat.

The other teams which qualified for the regionals include third seeded University of New Hampshire, Ohio State at the fourth spot, followed by the University of Pittsburgh, Indiana University of Pa. and Northeastern University.

"In a sense, this is our Sweet 16," Mitchell said. "The regionals are our playoff meet."

In the beginning of the season, no one gave the Minutewomen much of a chance of making the regional tourney. After upsetting Northeastern, though, and defeating the No. 3 seeded Wildcats, nonbelievers turned into believers.

"In the beginning, we would have been happy with the seventh seed," Mitchell said. "Now we want it [regional championship] and we have nothing to lose."

Softball team sweeps in Totman opener

Minutewomen too much for Hartford

By DAN SARAZEN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts softball team opened their home season yesterday with a pair of wins over Hartford 9-1, and 3-1. The wins improved the Minutewomen's record to 7-9.

It was a day of firsts. Holly Aprile threw the first pitch. Bonnie Schilling recorded the first out on a foulball pop-up, and UMass got the Hartford Lady Hawks out in the first half of the first inning one, two, three.

Softball is back at Totman field and while it does not exactly seem like spring, the weather was cooperative and allowed these games to be played. Despite the week of rain, the field was dry enough to play on (a round of applause for grounds keeper Dennis O'Neil).

The Minutewomen scored their first runs in the bottom of the second. Jen Miller and Darlene Claffey walked and Mary Duff brought Miller home with her first bunt of the season. It was a bunt that eluded all of the Lady Hawk infielders and found its way into center field. UMass had its first home lead of the season.

With two outs in the inning, Schilling walked to load the bases for Aprile, who promptly belted a base-clearing double into left center. Aprile was brought home on a single by catcher Cherie DellAnno and the Minutewomen were way out in front, 5-0.

Five runs would prove to be more than enough for Aprile who would end up pitching six innings with nine strikeouts, no runs, and two hits.

"Holly played well," said coach Elaine Sortino, "She had good control and a lot of strikeouts."

UMass would dump four more runs on the board in the bottom of the sixth, the highlight coming on another bases loaded double by Aprile. This time two runs scored.

DellAnno brought Aprile home with a triple and she would score on a single by the designated hitter, Chris Collins, and the Minutewomen took a 9-0 lead into the seventh.

Kendall Hodson came on to pitch the last inning. Although she struggled a little, she allowed one run on three singles. Hodson was able to get out of the inning. The final score was 9-1.

In the second game the Minutewomen scored one in the bottom of the first on a single by Aprile (who ended up the day 5-for-7, with two doubles and five RBI's) a walk to DellAnno. Both runners were moved over by a sacrifice by Collins and Aprile scored on a wild pitch.

Jen Devlin started the second game and pitched well for the first two innings. Devlin got herself into some trouble in the third, however, walking two and hitting three. The third hit batter forced in a run and the game was tied at one.

The damage could have been worse if it were not for some exceptional play behind the plate by DellAnno. DellAnno threw out one Lady Hawk trying to advance on a loose ball and another on a squibber in front of the plate. She also picked three

Big inning costly for baseball team, 15-6

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

HARTFORD — This game had all the makings of being a blowout.

The University of Hartford entered the afternoon with a 2-9 record. The Hawks were batting just .218 as a team, their team ERA (8.57) was two runs higher than that of the Minutemen. This game was supposed to be an easy win for UMass.

Surely they could not lose to a team with these kinds of numbers. The five game winning streak would be extended to six, the Minutemen would improve to 9-6, all would be well, the trip to Hartford would be a success. UMass lost, 15-6.

The first two and one half innings went according to plan, the Minutemen led 4-0. Derek Dana (2-for-4) hit a two-run homer in the second inning which scored Brian Bright giving the Minutemen a 2-0 lead. Mike Tobin followed suit in the third when he hit his first of two tremendous homers, this one of the 400-foot variety which scored Keith Richards.

All was well, the Minutemen were hitting Hartford pitcher Kenny Klee, this would be an easy win for the Minutemen, right?

Wrong!

In the bottom of the third, the Hawks sent 14 men to bat. Ten runs scored and just like that, Hartford had taken a 10-4 lead which they would never surrender. Ten runs in one inning, not bad for a team which came in hitting just .218.

In the 10-run third, the Hawks banged out eight hits, five against starter Daryle Corriveau and three off of Jim Telgheder. Bob Neena and Greg Centracchio each hit three run homers, Neena's blast hit high off the left field scoreboard, while Centracchio's flew over the right-center field fence.

"Daryle and Jim each have good arms, they just need to learn how to use them," said UMass coach Mike Stone. "Right now we have five guys (pitchers) doing the job, until we can get some other help, we've got some problems."

In every season, the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team can look forward to tough matches with teams like Cornell, Brown, Yale, Army and Syracuse.

UMass coach Dick Garber always enjoys facing the University of New Hampshire for a different reason — his son, Ted is the coach of the Wildcats.

This year, it will be a true family rivalry when the vastly-improved Wildcats come to The Hill for a 1 p.m. game tomorrow (WMUA 91.1-FM).

"They're in the midst of their best season in a long time," the elder Garber said. "Their top 12 or 13 [players] are pretty good."

Women's gymnastics eyes victory at NCAAs

Minutewomen try to overcome Penn State

By CHRIS MIRACLE
Collegian Staff

After getting a taste of postseason success at the Atlantic 10 Championships, the University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team, in their no-holds-bar style, will set their sights on regionals this Saturday at Ohio State University.

Seeded second in the tourney, the Minutewomen feel they only have top-seeded Penn State University blocking their path for a trip to the nationals (Oregon St.). With the Lady Lion's Allison Barber and Kim Thrasher, ranked first and fourth among the Northeast all-arounders, UMass has a tough task ahead of them.

"Essentially we're two points behind Penn. State," UMass coach Alfie Mitchell said. "If we hit on beam and floor, we'll make up those points."

After the A-10 meet, the Lady Lions will probably be looking over their shoulder a little more to keep an eye on the Minutewomen. If the Minutewomen hadn't suffered breakdowns on their two best events, beam and floor, Penn State's consecutive string of A-10 Championships might have ended at seven.

"Penn is only better on the vault," Mitchell said. "We have a better beam and floor. It'll come down to hits and who wants it the most."

With the good fortune of suffering no major injuries so far this season, the Minutewomen will stick to the same high-octane lineup that they've had all season. In their arsenal, UMass has Kristin Turmail — the best all-around gymnast in the A-10 this year, Tammy Marshall — winner of the all-around championship at the A-10's, Erika Baxter — A-10 uneven bar champ, along with the always consistent Kim Grady and Erin Klier.

"The girls are getting into the groove," Mitchell said. "After the A-10's, they believe they can win."

Other UM events for this weekend

Several other UMass sports team will be in action this weekend.

The women's lacrosse team takes to the field after more than a week off when it faces James Madison tonight at 7 at Boston College's Alumni Stadium.

The men's and women's track teams each open their spring seasons tomorrow at Dartmouth College in Hanover, N.H. The women's tennis team returns to action when it travels to Providence College tomorrow for a noon match.

WEATHER

Today it will be mostly sunny, breezy and mild with high temperatures of 55 to 60 degrees.

Greek finance records reported stolen

Records from last year and a half missing

By LISA SHAPIRO
Collegian Staff

The Panhellenic Council's financial records spanning the last year and a half were stolen sometime between Thursday night and Friday morning after vandals rifled through files in the Greek Area Government office.

Natasha Diephuis, former council treasurer who stepped down April 1 to serve as Student Government Association president, found the office door unlocked and vandalized Friday at about 9 a.m. She called the police shortly thereafter.

The contents of several file drawers along with rush pamphlets and toilet paper were strewn about the office floor. Reported missing were two ring binders and one file folder containing purchase orders, receipts and deposit records. No cash was kept in the office.

Officer Jim Turati of the Department of Public Safety, was at the scene and said there was no sign of forced entry. The incident is under investigation.

"I was surprised and angry when I first came in," said Diephuis, who was there to conduct interviews for the treasurer position she vacated.

"Obviously someone wants to hurt the organization," she said. "An obvious thing to do would be to take our financial records."

The council, which governs campus sororities, shares the office space at Student Union room 407 with the Interfraternity Council, which governs fraternities.

Council President Karen Renaud said she locked the office Thursday at 5 p.m. The office key is stored in a combination locker to which 15 council members have access, Diephuis said.

Yesterday, Renaud said she plans to stop storing the key in the locker and instead have the office lock changed and issue a key to each of the 15 members. After checking with the 15 council members, Renaud said she does not know of anyone who entered the office after she left.

Michele Yacovone, who was appointed treasurer yesterday, will have to reorganize the filing system, Diephuis said.

NORTHAMPTON — An emergency meeting of community leaders a week ago, a massive poster campaign, and a front page story in last Thursday's The Perkins Press were signs of the community's outrage of the closing of two church shelters for the homeless this weekend. As a result of the planning, Friday afternoon saw more than a hundred people gathered near City Hall to rally for the rights of the homeless. Meanwhile, community leaders discussed their "non-negotiable demands" with Mayor David Musante. Officials said they would move toward providing a permanent year round homeless shelter.

Student's struggle against AIDS ends at age 18

By HANK LOWENKRON
The Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — Ryan White, who won a long court battle to attend public school and overcame prejudice against himself and other AIDS victims, lost his five-and-a-half year struggle with the deadly disease yesterday. He was 18.

White died shortly after 7 a.m. at Riley Hospital for Children, where he had been hospitalized since March 29 with an AIDS-related respiratory infection. He had been heavily sedated and on a ventilator.

White's mother, Jeanne, and sister, Andrea, 16, had kept a bedside vigil, joined at times by celebrities such as singer Elton John and the Rev. Jesse Jackson.

Dr. Martin B. Kleiman, White's physician throughout his illness, said White's death followed a slow deterioration that had begun Saturday.

"At the end, his family and a few of the others who loved him were close at his side," Kleiman said. "He never regained consciousness, and I am confident that he suffered no pain at the end."

Carrie Van Dyke, a spokeswoman for Mrs. White, said the family needed "time to be alone, to recover, to grieve."

John, who stayed at the hospital with the Whites nearly a week, dedicated the song "Candle in the Wind" to White during the Farm AID IV concert Saturday night at the Hoosier Dome, about a mile from the hospital.

President Bush, who last week planted a tree in White's honor in downtown Indianaplis, said he and his wife, Barbara, were "deeply saddened" by White's death.

Student brings back the 25-plus club

By SARAH DEMASTER
Collegian Staff

For a number of years, Jonathon Starr had wanted to return to college. He finally got his chance in the fall of 1989, when his financial and personal circumstances enabled him to enroll in the University of Massachusetts as a physics major.

Starr, who had previous training in electrical engineering, said, "I felt I had to come back. There were certain things I had to learn to make a career change."

Starr is one of some 1500 non-traditional students at the University, who, for one reason or another, have decided to return to college.

Because of their being older than traditional students, and having experienced the world outside of college, Starr said non-traditional students face unique challenges in meeting students with whom they share common interests. Therefore, Starr has reactivated the 25-plus club, an organization which provides support and social activities for non-traditional students.

The group, which last year occasionally held dances, became defunct last fall, when its original members graduated. Because the club was still listed as a registered student organization, Starr said he was able to use its mailbox to receive messages from students interested in reactivating the group.

The club, reactivated this spring, contains a core group of eight students, and some 40 students attended a March 28 meeting to express interest in joining, he said. Among other activities, the club is planning a trip to the Clark Museum at Williams College in Williamstown, Va. he said.

EVERYONE TALKS ABOUT CHANGING THE WORLD THIS YEAR 3750 PEOPLE WILL ACTUALLY DO IT.

Not everyone is cut out to change the world. After all, it takes education, skills and a spare two years.

Also a willingness to work. Hard.

This year 3,750 Americans will join the Peace Corps to do just that. They'll do things like build roads, plant forests and crops, teach English, develop small businesses, train community health workers, or even coach basketball. However, what they'll be doing isn't half as important as the fact that they'll be changing a little piece of the world...for the better.

And when they return, these 3,750 Americans will find that experience doing hard work will have another benefit. It's exactly what their next employers are looking for.

So, give the Peace Corps your next two years. And while you're out changing the world, you'll also be making a place in it for yourself.

Whatever your degree or field of experience, talk to UMASS's Peace Corps Representatives, 12 Draper Hall, 545-2105. Call today or stop by the slide show and information session on April 10, at 7:30 pm, in 124 Draper Hall.

Conference discusses reproductive rights

Hampshire College holds three-day event

By DIANE OLEVSKY
Collegian Correspondent

The fourth annual Conference of Student Activists concerning the fight for abortion rights and reproductive freedom took place this weekend at Hampshire College. The three-day event featured speakers on issues ranging from class, gender, and race oppression to the right to safe and legal abortion.

"In this country, the fight for reproductive rights has been transacted into a narrow form, it is not limited to illegal abortion until we weave together a multinational, multicultural voice that addresses all of the issues surrounding reproductive rights, we won't have a strong movement," said Marlene Fried, director of the Civil Liberties and Public Policy Program at Hampshire College that organized the conference.

Lesbian rights activist, Meita Radhakrishnan, an exchange student from New Dehli, addressed the growth of white supremacist hate groups in the north east.

"Many of these groups (Nazi skinheads, Ku Klux Klan, the Constitutionalists) view women as the place to plant the white seed," she said. "We must raise consciousness within the women's community as women of color, Jewish women, and lesbians are all part of groups that are being persecuted."

Eastern Airline flight attendant on strike Deen Leonard said, "Under these conditions today in this country, you can't take anything for granted. "Workplace issues, reproductive rights, and disabled rights are all interconnected and as young people going about to join the work force you must recognize these topics as interdependent," she said.

U.N. ambassador to speak at SUB today

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
Collegian Staff

The British Ambassador to the United Nations and permanent representative on the Security Council Sir Crispin Tickell is scheduled as the keynote speaker today at 4 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom on "Global Environment and World Affairs."

Tickell, who will also receive an honorary degree from the University of Massachusetts following the lecture, has served as adviser to Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher on the environment.

"The honorary degree is for not only his prestigious stature in world diplomacy, but especially for his contributions to environmental and global climate issues," said James Walker, botany department head.

Introductory remarks will be made by UMass botany professor, Lynn Margulis, who is a member of the National Academy of Sciences.

William Chaloner, a professor of botany at UMass, will also speak at the convocation on "Changing Global Environments and the Emergence of Mankind."

Tickell has served in a variety of positions in his 36 years in the British Foreign Service. His career highlights include helping negotiate a cease-fire in the Iran-Iraq War and being designated the signatory for the British Government in a peace treaty ending the Falkland Islands dispute with Argentina.

Gospel Extravaganza gala tonight

Performance draws talent to honor Martin Luther King Jr.

By ALEXANDER NGUYEN
Collegian Staff

In honor of the late Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., there will be a Gospel Extravaganza tonight at 7:30 in the University of Massachusetts campus center auditorium.

The Extravaganza, free to the public, will present the Agape Christian Life Gospel Choir of New Haven, Conn., the Sensational Chosen Sons from Hartford, Conn., the Abundant Life Christian Tabernacle Gospel Choir from Bronx, N.Y., Christ Church of Deliverance from Hartford, Conn., the Amherst College Gospel Choir, the Hope Community Gospel Choir from Amherst, the Holy Trinity Gospel Choir from Springfield, and the Revival Time Deliverance Gospel Choir from Springfield.

Featured will be soloists Nadean Blakey, Leroy Blair, and Robert Winston and the guest speaker will be Dr. Jasper Rolle, Jr. from the Abundant Life Christian Tabernacle of New York.

Gospel music combines glossolalia (speaking in tongues), shouting (Holy dancing), trances and visions, and bodily movements such as hand clapping and foot stomping.

Gospel was created as music especially designed to complement the services of the first African-American pentecostal-holiness congregations.

The founding of the Church of God in Christ, the largest of these congregations, incorporated in 1907, marked the beginning of Gospel music.

The first period of gospel, from 1907 - 1920, is called the Conception. Gospel's premier singing preachers of this period were Charles Harrison Mason, Charles Price Jones, both pentecostal ministers, the Methodist minister Charles Albert Tindley, and the Baptist minister William Henry Sherwood.

In 1921 the National Baptist Convention issued the historic collection Gospel Pearls. The publication of this hymnal signaled the second period of gospel, 1921 - 1944, called the Development.

During the Development period, singers created a solo style and formed both back-up singers and independent vocal groups. Uniforms for male and female groups, mixed groups and choirs were created.

Some composed songs for the style and pianists created a gospel piano style borrowing from ragtime, barrelhouse, blues and protestant hymns.

Among the singers of this period were a group of blind men and women, including Arizona Dranes and Mamie Forehand, and sighted singers such as Clare Hudmon, known as the 'Georgia Peach,' Ernestine B. Washington, the Dixie Hummingbirds, the Fairfield Four, the Roberta Martin Singers, Mother Willie May Ford Smith, Sallie Martin and Mahalia Jackson. 1945 - 1968 marked the period of gospel called Refinement. During this period, gospel's style had been established, an audience cultivated, and people became 'professional gospel singers.'

Among singers of this period were Clara Ward and the Ward singers, Brother Joe May, Professor Alex Bradford, the Caravans, the Original Gospel Harmonettes, the Pilgrim Travelers,the Blind Boys and the Nightengales.

In 1969 gospel moved into it's period of Fusion with the recording of Edwin Hawkins' O Happy Day. In this period the older style of gospel, known as 'traditional gospel,' began adopting the vocal timbre, melodic delivery style, harmonies and piano style of other black musics such as jazz and soul.

This new style is known as 'contemporary gospel.' Tonight the audience will be treated to and lifted by both styles of gospel.

From all it's periods of evolution gospel music has and continues to make an artistic, religious and social impact and contribution to international music and culture.

GLB Counseling Collective provides range of resources

By KIMBERLY O'BRIEN
Collegian Correspondent

The Gay, Lesbian Bisexual Counseling Collective is an important resource that many people may need, but do not know exists, according to a counselor at the collective who did not wish to be named.

Headed by Felice Yeskel, the Counseling Collective has been in operation for more than 10 years, and offers a wide variety of services, she said. The collective offers free, confidential walk-in advising to people who are questioning their own sexuality, and also those who are having difficulty accepting and coming out with their choice, according to a collective counselor.

"If a person is intimidated and does not want to come in to the office, the collective will talk to them over the phone," Yeskel said. "We can also refer people to other support groups in the area."

The collective is comprised of a group of concerned lesbians, bisexuals and gay men who are interested in helping students and community members questioning their sexuality.

The collective is also available to heterosexuals and "allies" who are trying to understand homosexuality and are concerned with homosexual issues. The collective not only serves the UMass community, but also the Five-College Area and the Pioneer Valley. Both students and non-students can take advantage of the free services provided by the Counseling Collective.

Yeskel, director of the program for gay, lesbian and bisexual concerns, has provided training and supervision for counselors at the collective since 1982, estimated that this semester, about five to ten people a week came in to seek advising, "but it's hard to say exactly, because it changes from week to week."

In addition to providing counseling both over the phone and face to face, the collective holds a rap group every Wednesday night at 8 in Student Union room 413B. It gives people a group setting in which to share their common experiences or just listen to others, a counselor said.

"It's basically a confidential forum to discuss our own experiences, and also to listen to other people's experiences," he said.

There is a set topic each week, but the topic can change depending on the group's interests and needs, he said.

The collective also has a library, which holds literature written by and for gays, lesbians and bisexuals heterosexual allies and friends and families. Books can be borrowed from the library for up to two weeks, a counselor said.

The Counseling Collective, once part of the Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay Alliance, separated from them and became an independent Registered Student Organization about ten years ago, Yeskel said.

The collective is open Mondays 1 p.m.-5 p.m., Tuesdays 11 a.m.-7 p.m., Wednesdays 1 p.m.-7 p.m., Thursdays 3 p.m.-7 p.m., and Fridays 1 p.m.-3 p.m. and located in Student Union room 406G.

■ student reactivates club

Starr said he restarted the club because "a lot of older students seem to feel isolated. It's good to be with a group of people who are in similar situations," he said.

UMass sophomore natural resources studies major and club member Randy Bray said he agrees it is important for non-traditional students to have a place to get to know each other.

"Many older students don't feel comfortable saying they're older students. The typical response is, 'Oh, you don't look that old,'" said Bray, who enrolled in the University almost six years after graduating from high school. "It seems as if it's something to be ashamed of."

Alice Sewall, a University freshman psychology major and club secretary, said most organizations and support groups at UMass are aimed at traditional college students.

"I don't think I've had time to worry about socializing between my classes and work, but it would be nice to pick up the phone and call an older student," Sewall said.

Patty Daukantas, who is pursuing her second bachelor's degree in physics, said, "The 25-plus club is really it for non-traditional students. There are not many other groups tailored to us."

There are a lot of special-interest RSOs, but you can't join a million RSOs and still do your work," she said.

Daukantas, who is the club treasurer, said she joined the club because she lives off-campus and cannot meet people at the dining commons and in the dormitories like traditional students do.

"I lived in large dorms [when I first went to college], and I did fine when I was 18, but I'm not 18 anymore," she said. "There are some things I don't have in common with 18-year-olds, like the thrill of procuring alcohol when your underage."

While she said there are social disadvantages to being an older student, Daukantas said there are academic advantages.

"It's easier to be a dedicated student when you're older, because you realize you're sacrificing a full-time job or family life," Daukantas said.

Starr said he agrees being an older student has its advantages. "You have some sense of how what you learn fits into the rest of the world, and you bring that knowledge and experience that you wouldn't otherwise have."

Donna Bivens and Milagros Padilla, of the Boston-based Women of Color for Reproductive Freedom, added that we can't separate issues of class, gender and race.

"We must all get together to structurally change things," said Bivens.

Padilla cited the Boston City Hospital's lack of midwives and beds for Latin American and African-American women as one of the main issues which women's activist groups such as the one that she and Bivens belong to are fighting for.

"Disability has been used by people to make decisions without enough accurate information, it is not immoral to have a child with a disability,"Laura Rauscher, disability rights activist, said. "We should also work for the option to have a child if we so decide."

The morning's events were followed by a series of workshops including AIDS Education,, teenage pregnancy, lesbian motherhood, reproductive rights for Asian-American women, and population control in the Third World.

Fear of homosexuality a sickness

Nick Wilder, how can you call yourself normal when you say that you actually spend your time frowning at homosexuals? ("Shunning normal people as homophobics hypocritical," April 5)

What about your idea that gay people "are incapable of mating, or of having the desire to mate?" I know plenty of gay people who have children and of others who want children.

The "in" crowd can be better described as pseudo-intellectual, verbose and inclined to use big words to make their opinions sound correct. Those of the "in" crowd are also the type who think they are doing oppressed groups a favor when they treat them with the respect and dignity they deserve.

According to the mental health profession's educated opinion, homosexuality is natural and healthy and is not "a grim disorder needing therapy." When you say gays need "intensive analysis and therapy," do you mean the way they used to be "treated" with electric shocks, hydro baths and sex hormone injections?

At one point, you say that homophobia is what drives people to "break out in a cold sweat, start tearing (one's) hair out and feel compelled to run out and 'bash' homosexuals." Earlier, you say 'it is puke inducing' when straights are called latently gay for looking down on homosexuality. By your own definition, people who puke or who would even consider it for that reason are homophobic.

If you and your like are always puking and frowning upon homosexuality, you are not as healthy and secure as you believe. You are fearful and ignorant of homosexuality . I suggest intensive analysis and therapy for your illness.

A number of gay and bisexual people indeed have psychological problems. But who wouldn't when people all around them are behaving the way you and your like are? Many of them are helping themselves and others by coming out.

What America is all about

After nearly four years here, I've come to realize how sheltered university life really is. We're not part of the world when we come on campus. We're not even part of the country.

We don't know what America is. How could we know? We go to class, hang around at the Student Union, have a beer at the Hatch, maybe spend some time in the library. If we're really active, maybe we join a protest. But we're still secluded.

Bob Bobala

We don't know what America is like. Of course, we try to find out. We read the Globe. We take classes and read books that we think will tell us what's really out there. But they don't do any good. Nothing I've read has painted me a picture of American life.

That is, nothing until I found On an Average Day . . . (Fawcett Columbine) by Tom Heymann. This should be on the bookshelves of every student who wants to know what America is all about. It's a book of simple (or not so simple) statistics that tells it like it is.

For example, are you interested in finding out about our eating habits? On an average day in America:

- 101,280,321 adults are on diets.
- Americans eat 24,657,534 hot dogs, drink 524 million servings of Coca-Cola, are served 2,739,726 Dunkin' Donuts (I presume the 101,280,321 Americans on diets did not contribute to these statistics).
- 133,932,656 Americans eat out.
- 16,300,000 eat at McDonald's.
- 2,005,479 Americans suffer from heartburn (No, there's no statistic for how many heartburn sufferers eat at McDonald's).
- Americans spend 1,369,863 dollars on laxatives (Clearly, we're eating at McDonald's too much and not getting enough Raisin Bran in our diets).
- 3,561,644 dollars are spent on tortilla chips.

Now, that's a mouthful. We do spend 2,021,918 dollars on exercise equipment to work all this food off. But, we don't seem to be keeping ourselves in very good shape because we need to take 80 million aspirin tablets every day.

But enough about food. You want to know about relationships? You want to know how you and your girlfriend are going to do out there in the real world? Well, on the average day in America:

- 6,567 couples are married.
- 3,197 couples are divorced.
- Men spend 26 minutes cleaning the house; women, 59 minutes (I say we live on campus for the next 20 years. Who cleans their dorm room?).
- 1,109,589 condoms are sold; 443,836 of those are purchased by women.

So, we've come a long way in some areas, but not as far in others. Women buy just as many condoms as men do, but they still clean the house twice as long as we do. The battle of the sexes continues, but, through it all, each day 56 American men get nose jobs and 47 American women receive breast lifts, not to mention that 46,575,342 dollars are spent on beauty-related goods and services.

But that's only food and relationships, you say. Tell me about something deep. Well, the Collegian only has so much space. But it does appear that America's spiritual crisis isn't getting any better. On the average day, Christian bookstores sell 34,932 Bibles, but only 875 calls are made to dial-a-prayer while 41,096 are made to dial-a-porn numbers. The worst news of all, however, is that every day four people call Graceland asking to speak to Elvis.

That's America! Don't go out there. Statistics don't lie. Stay on campus as long as you can.

Defending the lifestyle of Western Massachusetts

Unlike most students here, I am from western Massachusetts. I grew up in a small town on the Connecticut border which is referred to by most as 'the sticks.'

I drink well water and call my mailman by his first name. I am a short drive from Springfield, and for this reason never considered myself a country bumpkin.

I transferred to UMass a year ago because I wanted out of my small hometown and the small college I used to attend.

I almost hesitated coming here because I especially wanted out of the western part of the state. I looked at schools in the east, but nothing appealed to me. So I decided to stay.

But the truth is, I feel like an outsider.

Most of my friends here are from eastern Massachusetts. Specifically Boston — West Roxbury, Dorchester, Roslindale.

I had never even heard of these places before.

There are many things about us that are different.

My friends are constantly teasing me about my small town.

They crack jokes about how old I was when I got a license to drive my horse and carriage. They talk about what poor local news we have, and tease me about my accent. Especially when it comes to pronouncing my name.

My name was never a problem until I came here. Everyone had always said it the way I did, the way my mother did. But now I am told I pronounce my name incorrectly. I'm told the way I say it makes it a boy's name.

I think I should know how to say my name correctly.

Erin Martin

I have learned to appreciate what I think is a Boston accent.

I am always trying to pronounce names like Bob and Tom without my western drawl. My friends and I will argue until we are red in the face over which pronunciation is correct.

Problem is, we each think "our way" is the "right way."

This discussion of east versus west has made me wonder how two places in one state can be so entirely different.

My friends have also taught me about Boston. When I was growing up, it was just a place where the children's museum and the aquarium were. As I became older, it became a terrific place for shopping.

But now, Boston has come to mean more. It is no longer just my capital city. It is home for many of my school friends. It is a city I am always eager to learn more about.

People who grew up there have pride in their city. They always want to take people places and show them around.

I am not so eager to show people my hometown. There are no historical landmarks, no department stores. There isn't even a single traffic light.

But as much as I dislike my hometown, I have had many great memories growing up. These ideas have probably shaped me into the person I am today.

And as I meet new people, and learn about new places, I incorporate these into my current lifestyle.

My desire to get out of western Massachusetts has not caused me to put it down. But I nonetheless find it difficult sometimes to defend many of the 'hick town' connotations I hear.

I have also learned to appreciate eastern Massachusetts for what it is — a part of my home state that I would like to know more about.

I wish those of you who put western Massachusetts down wouldn't be so quick to judge.

After all, you chose to come to school in this state.

Notes from the Campus Center Basement

Ahh, spring is in the air. Some sun, rain, warmth and growing green grass. Makes one feel young again. And with this reborn youth comes a desire to be active. And here at UMass, what is the activity of choice? Protesting! Luckily this year we have good reason to protest — the budget cuts to public higher education and the abominable fee and tuition increases.

This week, April 12, Thursday to be exact, another rally by students from across the state will be held in Boston.

We as voters, who happen to be students presently, must make it known that we will not stand idly by as public education is covered with dirt in a six-foot deep hole.

Buses leave early in the morning, from Haigis Mall I believe. So wake up early! For more info call the SGA senate offices at 545-0341 for the specifics.

Graduating students like myself may not really care about the estimated thousand dollar increase for the coming academic year, but we must.

I have a cousin at Westfield State who can barely afford it now. What are his tuition and fees going to amount next year?

I have another cousin who is starting elementary school in September. I have to wonder if we don't stop our legislators from hacking apart the budget, what is going to be let for him?

Massachusetts is the education mecca of the world. There are more colleges and universities here than any where else. It is up to all of us to make sure that this mecca doesn't become solely private.

Peter Leon

The candidates for the Governorship leave a hell of a lot to be desired. I feel like I am back in 1988.

Each of the candidates has stated that they support public higher education, but most have poor track records. Silber has even stated he thinks it is a waste to have the same program at different institutions. Looks like the College of Engineering has to close so we can keep ULowell in existence.

Others of them are already involved in the workings of state government. They have supported higher education by cutting the budget, causing these gross increases, instead of cutting these lovely consultants. You know the ones who help decorate offices and tell the state to build a prison on the median of route 128.

It's high time these consultants took the high road, to the unemployment line.

Coming in November: another truly inane and absurd proposal by Barbara Anderson and Citizens for Limited Taxation. This one would cut taxes so deep that revenues would plummet to the point where the deficit would double in a year. Even now as towns and cities roll back proposition two and a half, another bright CLT proposal to make the rich richer and the poor poorer — ain't they grand?

Quote of the week, with those Citizens for Limited Taxation in mind: "Yes, I hate rich people. When I'm rich, I will no longer hate rich people. I'll hate poor people. It's the American way!"— Kirstie Alley, in her role as Rebecca on Cheers on NBC.

Media manipulation: S.Africa depiction of violence as racial

Black-on-black violence diminishes the stature of Nelson Mandela - (Time Magazine vol.135, no.15; April 9,1990)

We couldn't expect less from the United States media's role in assisting the White-minority warmongers of South Africa by waging a psychological warfare on innocent American citizenry. All the US bourgeois media (television and press) have been fighting this war alongside their Euro-South African haters of people of color since apartheid began to maim, massacre and dispossess Black South Africans of their land and property.

Sekhulumi Ntsoaole

The Apartheid Euro-South African military regime, since its inception in 1948, has succeeded in dividing our people in terms of their race and ethnicity. It went further to co-opt collaborators from the oppressed people of South Africa (Africans, Indians, and people of mixed-parenthood). The Black collaborators agreed to head the CONCENTRATION CAMPS (Bantustans) while the Indian and mixed-race people were elevated to the status of second-class citizenship in the tricameral bogus White-dominated "parliament."

The most famous Black collaborator who agreed to serve in the South African Defence (Destructive) Force and South African Police has been none other than Gatsha Buthelezi. He leads a Zulu-based branch of the SADF which is being built through the intimidation and coercion of our brothers and sisters who reside in the Natal province of South Africa.

Gatsha Buthelezi who has silenced our Zulu King, Zwelethini does his coercion in the following manner: In his concentration camp of KwaZulu, families who need water for drinking and cooking have to produce Inkatha membership cards or else they are condemned to death either by thirst or by spears and knobkirries wielded by Buthelezi's Inkatha. In order for children to enter school premises, their parents must show Inkatha membership. In order for a Zulu to get a job, he or she must produce the card. Those who joined Inkatha felt weak to demand their rights to these basic lifesavers.

Inkatha-SADF day after day engages in this onslaught on defenseless people of South Africa by mass killings, burning of their homes, raping women, and destroying all their belongings if they don't join Inkatha, hence SADF. Of course, Inkatha members are Black people. Black uniformed police officers have also massacred and still are killing Black people of South Africa. The US media does not call this Black-on-Black violence. When White uniformed police officers kill White people of South Africa who want genuine change, the US media does not call it White-on-White violence. The Inkatha offensive on defenseless people of Natal region is called Black-on-Black violence and this violence is supposed to diminish the stature of Rolihlahla Mandela. The same perpetrators of violence, accompanied by their media in South Africa and in the Eurocentric Western world, were the ones that sent Mandela to prison on trumped-up charges. They have released him yet into a prison of multitudes and expect him to stop the violence perpetrated by them.

Well, we know that European South Africans were not sincere when they released Mandela and deceived the world that they were ready to change. It is one of those delaying tactics the regime has always used. They failed to break comrade Mandela's spirit for a quarter of a century in prison. But because Eurocentric rationalization is weak, they still think they can do anything to Mandela and to our people. This is old-fashioned thinking whose place belongs nowhere but in the archives of useless history. To the oppressed masses of our people in Africa and elsewhere around the world, Mandela is an inspiration, and no doubt with him we shall trample the apartheid regime and its sympathizers underfoot. AMANDLA - MATLA!

Israel-S.Africa ties

In the recent course of events surrounding the discovery of University of Massachusetts' investments in South Africa, there has been an enormous backlash over one of the investments — the Israeli bonds held in the bank of Budnitz. Accusations have been hurled from the "Israel can do no wrong" lobby at this school, in blatant disregard of the facts.

The links between the state of Israel and the apartheid regime are overt, extensive and well documented. In 1983, the two nations signed a bilateral agreement concerning research and development.

This agreemnet led to the creation of The Israel/South Africa Industrial and Agricultural Research and Development Program, which fell under the administration of the South African Inventions and Development Corporation and Israel's Office of the Chief Scientist of it's Department of Trade and Industry.

Israel's military links to South Africa are also extensive. On Oct. 26, 1989, the National Broadcasting Corporation, citing US intelligence , reported on Israeli-South African collaboration on ballistic missile development.

In 1987, Israel's Prime Minister, Yitzhak Shamir effectively acknowledged Israeli-South African military ties, when he announced that Israel would sign no new defense contracts with South Africa, adding that all existing contracts would be honored.

These contracts directly violated the United Nations Security Council's mandatory embargo of arms to South Africa. The NBC report clearly shows that the Israel-South Africa military relationship still continues.

These are only a few examples of these ties.

The state of Israel has been historically one of South Africa's strongest supporters. It is a fact openly acknowledged in Israel. Only in the US does the pro-Israeli lobby deny this in its ludicrous attempts to portray Israel as the stronghold of justice, democracy and decency in the world.

For people professing justice to stand so ardently and uncritically by a state, especially one such as Israel, is a supreme act of hypocrisy.

Kashmir: valley of tears

In scenes that were chillingly reminiscent of the video clips of Palestinian demonstrators teasing Israeli troops on the West Bank, angry mobs led by women and children spilled into streets beckoning policemen to fire. [from "Kashmir Valley: Militant Siege", INDIA TODAY, Jan. 31, 1990].

Kashmir. The breathtakingly beautiful vale of Kashmir, ensconced in the Northern Mountains of the Indian subcontinent, once drove an anonymous Persian poet to sigh, "If there is a paradise on the face of the earth, it is here, it is here, ..."

Dastidar/Bose

Kashmir. Populated by a proud people, three million strong, almost all of whom are Shiite Muslims. They speak a unique Dardic language (distinct from the Sanskrit-based languages of Northern India). Despite successive waves of invaders including Turks, Central Asians, Afghans and Sikhs, the Kashmiris retain a distinct national identity, culture, and language. In 1846, the last of these invaders, the Sikhs, ceded the valley to the British.

Driven, as always, by greed, the British sold Kashmir to an obscure Hindu king, Gulab Singh, for the paltry sum of 7.5 million Indian rupees. On August 15, 1947, the sun set on the Raj and two new states, India and Pakistan, were born amidst bloodshed. The era of decolonization had arrived. For Kashmir, the agony had just begun. The corrupt Hindu ruler of Kashmir, Hari Singh, joined the Indian Union without consulting his people. The official Indian version of the annexation of Kashmir is as follows. The recognized Indian ruler joined the Indian Union. A Kashmiri assembly ratified accession in 1956. Article 370 of the Indian Constitution accorded Kashmir wide-ranging autonomy.

The Kashmiris beg to differ. They say that the people, not a dictatorial ruler bereft of legitimacy, should have determined Kashmir's fate. They assert that the "representative" assembly of 1956 was a collection of stooges. Article 370 was reduced to a farce in 1954, when India deprived Kashmir of all real autonomy.

India's first Prime Minister, Nehru, said on November 2, 1947:"We have declared that the fate of Kashmir is ultimately to be decided by its people. That pledge we have given not only to the people of Kashmir, but to the world."

Nehru committed India to a United Nations-sponsored referendum that would ascertain the true desires of the Kashmiris. He reneged on his promise in 1957, when he declared that accession to India was irrevocable. The plebiscite has not been held to this day, nor is it likely to be held in the near future, as gunfire echoes in the Paradise, and tear gas shrouds the valley.

For decades, India manipulated Kashmiri governments, appointing and dismissing them at will, till the Kashmiris lost all faith in the Indian electoral process.

Vast "development funds", pumped into Kashmir by the Indian government, were siphoned off by a bloated and corrupt bureaucracy. The vast majority of Kashmiris continued to live in abject poverty. The valley simmered with silent rage.

This January, the valley exploded. Hundreds of unarmed demonstrators have been gunned down since then by Indian security forces. Blanket curfews have been imposed on town after town, and a total ban on press coverage is in effect.

The Kashmiri nationalists have resorted to classic urban insurrectionary tactics. These include selective assassination of officials and collaborators, and use of the general strike.

The Indian government has decided to crush the Kashmiri uprising by brute force. It is also no coincidence that repression has been unleashed on Muslims at a time when an alarming ascendancy of fascistic Hindu fundamentalism is evident in India.

The Indian Union is based on a contract between diverse communities that they stand to gain in coming together, as long as their ethno-cultural identities are respected. The killing in Kashmir threatens the very fabric of this agreement.

When Kashmiri Muslims are killed, the insecurity of all Indian Muslims deepens. When fundamentalists instigate Hindus and Muslims to kill each other, how can any minority trust that a union with India will protect their people's interests?

Those who use catch-words like "patriotism" or "national unity', or point to an evil Pakistani hand to justify brutal policies in Kashmir destabilize the Indian Union by exacerbating the fear of many communities that they are being drowned in a wave of Hindu-Hindi chauvinism. These are the true "anti-nationals".

As for the pious rhetoric of the Pakistani state on the issue of Kashmir, we are perfectly aware that a spoon does not fall in Islamabad without its echoes being heard in Washington, D.C.

The U.S. tends to attract the most reactionary and chauvinist elements of upper class Indian society. Pan-Hindu ideas lurk behind many seemingly innocuous facades. Let them stand warned. Secular and progressive forces may be a minority on this campus. In India, however, the progressive movement continues to grow among peasants, among the intelligentsia, and even within the ranks of bureaucracy and military. India will not yield the ideals of its freedom struggle so easily. The truth alone will triumph. Satyameva Jayate.

Dead Milkmen
SUB
Saturday, April 7

It's great when a band has just two hits, plays neither, and still puts on a great show. This sums up the performance put on by the Dead Milkmen Saturday night at the Student Union Ballroom.

Like crazed maniacs, students slam danced to the music put forth by the Philadelphia foursome. Fans tossed each other above the crowd playing a sort of human volleyball, while others spat huge amounts of water on everyone around them.

With their fourth album, Metaphysical Graffitti, on its way, the Milkmen remain as strange as ever, and aren't close to running out of things to make fun of. In fact, Rodney Anonymous, the group's lead singer said that more than enough material was created for Metaphysical Graffitti, and they will save the left over songs for an upcoming "black album."

The group is as interesting to interview as they are to watch; topics included all managers having square butts, Rodney's desire to be arrested, the time he had a cold and — much to the liking of their fans — blew a big snot out of his nose onstage, as well as Steve Miller being the root of all music, all evil, all evil music, and everything in general.

Lord Maniac, bass guitarist demonstrated his satiric nature even before the group was formed with an editorial he wrote called "I think Viet Nam Vets are a bunch of crybabies."

During Saturday's concert, Rodney Anonymous, named for his favorite poet, revealed the band's true thoughts. He testified that their music isn't to be taken literally, by saying at the end of "Stuart," a song about "what the queers are doing to the soil," "It's scary to think that some people actually think that way."

Aside from Dick van Dyke reruns and the crack cocaine epidemic, Metaphysical Graffitti pokes fun at what drummer Dean Clean said he hates most in the world; New Kids on the Block.

"Excuse me while I puke and die" belched Rodney, in the live rendition of this song dedicated to the New Kids, and put to the tune of Jimi Hendrix's "Purple Haze."

Opening band, Cordelia's Dad, played a fine, Pogues-tinged set. Though their stage presence is practically non-existent, they have a great deal of potential and may even make it big with their soon to be released debut album on the Ocra/Rough Trade label.

'Hunting Cockroaches' nibbles, but doesn't bite

By GREG ORME
Collegian Correspondant

Hunting Cockroaches
Hampden Theatre
Saturday, April 7

What would you do, if during a sleepless night, a strange man appeared, crawling from betwixt a crack in your mattress? These strange apparitions appear constantly to Jan and Anka Krupinski during one such bout of insomnia. The couple trapped in their own shabby, window-barred apartment, communicate directly with the audience in the form of monologue about their forced exile to New York City from Poland during the official dissolution of Solidarity in 1981.

The cockroaches which infest their abode act as metaphors for the memories which equally disturb their peace of mind. During one night, an immigration officer, two KGB agents, a city bum and a patronizing American couple appear to the dislocated emigres in a fluidity of time and place that takes us back to Poland and forward into an uncertain American future.

Although it is not the first exploration of the clash of a foreign culture with the monolithic cliche which is the "American Dream," the play still manages to be entertaining, informative and original. Playwright Jonusz Glowacki remains unbiased. The dark side of both cultures are presented. The Poland of 1981 is seen to be repressive and backward. The KGB agent who grills Jan comments that only fools write because, "A smart man never leaves any trace behind him."

America is shown to be confusing and inconsistent. The myth "If you are good enough you'll always make it" poisons the stark reality of the intellectuals. The lack of actual opportunity (without contacts or a Green Card) forces the desperate couple to lie to their friends and invent false fantastic successes.

Dramatically the play had to cope with an older and unresponsive audience. However, the performance did lack pace and spark. The two main characters, Peggy Kennedy and Alan Morse, were never less than professional, but at times seemed to lack the power to drive the play along. The cameo performances were generally amusing, as all entered from beneath the bed. Jane Moser distinguished herself playing the aghast Mrs. Thompson with the right blend of ignorant patronization and offended sensibilities.

With one more jolt of energy the play could have been both an enjoyable didacticism and personally uplifting.

Sembene talks on African film

By LISA MILLEGAN
Collegian Staff

Fielding questions on such diverse topics as African feminism and the future of African cinema, Senegalese filmmaker and novelist Ousmane Sembene spoke to an enraptured audience Thursday afternoon at Amherst College.

The discussion initially focused on Sembene's near legendary status as "the founding father of the African cinema."

Through a translator, Sembene said although some people would like to think otherwise, he is no monument. He also disapproves of his power as a spokesman for Senegal.

"It is the mission entrusted to an artist to represent his people but it is difficult and dangerous because he is not elected by the people and has no monopoly in speaking for them."

Sembene added that although he may be the pioneer of African cinema, there are now many young people aspiring to become filmmakers.

"People used to think that Africans couldn't make movies, but now we see it's possible," he said. "There is a National Movie Makers Association in every African country and finally Africans own the movie theaters. We have control from the point of production to the point of consumption."

The filmmaker also fervently denied that his films were solely directed to an African audience.

"I refuse to make a film for a specific country or race. My films are for everybody, even though everybody might not understand the cultural context in which they were made."

He and his crew are constantly aware that the films will be shown to an international audience. "We make sure the actor's lines aren't too long and we place a lot of emphasis on facial expression and behavior."

The questions turned to Sembene's views on women when one student brought up the scene in Mandabi, in which two fairly poor women spend a lot of money on lacy red bras. The student asked Sembene why he portrayed the women so frivolously.

"The bras embellished their lives," Sembene said. "Our women are very feminine and I believe that African women should be firm in their femininity and not apologize for it. The fact that they bought bras doesn't make them any less militant."

A series of lectures and film-screenings of Sembene's work will be held in the Pioneer Valley through April 14. The series will culminate this weekend with a National Conference on Sembene's work held at the UMass. Included will be the United States premiere screening of Sembene's latest film, Camp Thiaroye.

Mummenschanz mesmerizes

Mummenschantz
Fine Arts Center

Calling Mummenschantz a mime troupe is kind of like calling the Taj Mahal a building.

Consisting of only three dancers/mimes/body contortionists, the Swiss troupe fascinated both the young and old with their dazzling and creative movements, shapes and costumes.

What Mummenschantz does can not be classified, much less written about, which would explain why they don't name their various skits in their program, they only draw pictures of them. Yet my task is to describe the indescribable. An impossible task at best.

The first half of the show consisted of mostly outrageous costumed shapes that made it virtually impossible to differentiate if the people inside were standing on their heads or feet. The performers tumbled and twirled with incredible dexterity, all the while remaining fascinating and humorous.

The second half dealt primarily with relationships. There was the trademark toilet paper couple, the balloon couple who could not seem to inflate their heads in the right manner, and the flirting couple whose faces consisted of pieces of paper. Their expressions changed with each piece they ripped off their face.

There was so much more deliciously wonderful pieces, each more innovative than the last. It was a magical evening.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Refrain from unconventional behavior that could jeopardize your reputation. An older person offers valuable advice. Follow it to reap new financial benefits. Being at peace with yourself is vital.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Deal with any career or business problems logically. Experts' advice will pay off in the near future. Be conscientious about your health. Sincerity and affection help restore domestic tranquility.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Look before you leap where business and romance are concerned. An argument could erupt if you insist on having your own way. A secret agreement could help advance your career goals.

CANCEER (June 21-July 22): Work with someone who wants to improve the bottom line. The path to success will become smoother. A patient attitude will help you avoid conflict. Be more consistent when dealing with teen-agers.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Becoming a better listener will help you bridge the generation gap. Teamwork is recommended to boost profits. Member of the opposite sex challenges you to a battle of wits. You win!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Have the courage to make sweeping changes. Other will realize their mistakes. Study trends carefully before making any real estate or stock investments. A motherly person offers you excellent advice.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Financial matters are in the spotlight. Do not give up on someone who seems to have "insurmountable" problems. The past may be recalled, but it will not touch you. Be wary of flatters.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): New people and interests will add zest to your life. Make certain you are properly remunerated for your creative efforts. Get in touch with someone who has been on your mind.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Travel can bring great satisfaction. Be willing to meet someone halfway to clinch a lucrative deal. Something that has been missing will be found. Romance is splendiferous!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Handle routine matters with care. Attention to detail will help you avoid costly mistakes. Break old habits. Share your expertise with a younger person. Love at first sight is possible!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Teamwork can be the key to a senior employee's success. Travel will result in a favorable career or romantic change. Family ties grow stronger. Revive an old plan, but apply new techniques.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Correct past mistakes before launching new projects. Tend to paperwork promptly to avoid unnecessary clutter. An out-of-town visitor adds to the evening's enjoyment.

THINK SUMMER
In The Seacoast!

Few places can match the University of New Hampshire summer experience—the challenge of academic excellence, in a setting rich with nature and history. It's an easy drive from some of America's most scenic mountains and beaches...set in the seacoast, about an hour north of Boston, in an area that provides jazz festivals, rock concerts, summer theater, boat races, art shows, and many summer jobs. Choose from over 300 credit courses in liberal arts, business, education, engineering, physical sciences, agriculture, biological sciences, health and human services, and many more.

Join us for Summer 1990 at UNH. Earn credits, make up courses, or get a head start on Fall.

Mail Registration Begins April 9. Phone Registration Begins April 16.

to opened the fourth to make it 15-10, the 'Cats clawed back to 15-13 and were flying until Tim Soudan (four goals, two assists) and Jamie Bergan hit to finally put it out of reach.

Some sore spots continued to stick out for UMass — namely, dumb penalties (11 in all).

"It was nip and tuck," Garber said. "I thought we'd get two or three and blow it wide open, but we had all those penalties. It keeps them in the game."

"We thought we could play with them," said Ted Garber, who has applied for the UMass job. "We had to get the ball to create the offense. That's what we've been doing all year."

Chris Johnson at sixth.

In doubles, Teitelbaum and Johnson pair up at first, Wadsworth and Audet are seeded second, and Hechemy and Stone seeded third.

As for today's match with Rhody and the following spring matches, Roberts has a cautiously confident outlook. Yet, even with a tough schedule and the effects of the state's fiscal mess, Roberts is confident of his team's ability to hang tough.

"Barring injury," he says, "we have as good a chance as any team to take the New Englands."

to the top.

UMass scored over 184 in the A-10s, but was hurt by falls on the balance beam this weekend.

"We had major problems on the beam. We scored a 44.8, which is two [points] below our average," Mitchell said. "We put up six girls, and five of them fell. But I think even if we didn't fall, the placing would have been the same."

The Minutewomen were fourth overall on the beam, while finishing second on the uneven bars, third in the floor exercise and fifth in the vault.

Also performing well for the Minutewomen were senior Kristin Turmail and junior Erika Baxter, who tied for eighth in the all-around with scores of 36.7. Mitchell, the Atlantic 10 Coach-of-the-Year, was also nominated for Northeast Region Coach-of-the-Year honors.

unearned runs in the first off freshman Scott Meaney. UMass answered with a run of its own and three more in the second, the key hit being a two-run triple by Tobin.

Meaney held Dartmouth through the fourth but in the fifth, a routine double-play grounder went through shortstop Glenn DiSarcina's legs and eventually the two runners who should have been erased scored to tie the game at 4-4.

UMass was not to be denied, as Drew Comeau ripped his first homer of the season in the sixth to give UMass a 5-4 lead.

"Drew came up with one tremendous hit for us," Stone said. "The way we played we could have lost both games. I know we're better than them, we just didn't play the whole [first] game."

UMass gymnasts reach NCAA finals

• Booker qualifies with fifth place finish on floor, 11th in vault

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

Although April is the time for Major League Baseball and bringing out spring clothing, Cal Booker doesn't mind extending the winter a little longer.

The University of Massachusetts sophomore qualified for the NCAA men's gymnastics finals at the University of Minnesota on April 19. Booker placed fifth on his floor routine with a score of 9.6 and 11th on vaulting with a 9.15 in the NCAA Eastern regional finals at Penn State on Saturday.

"[Floor] was a perfect routine in terms of deductions," UMass coach Roy Johnson said. Booker also had to perform two vaults, receiving a 9.3 on his first and a 9.0 on his second.

"He did his best vault of the year [on the first] — he stuck it," Johnson said. "On his second vault he touched the floor but then he stood right up."

"I just wanted to stay clean with my set," said Booker of his floor routine. "There was a big crowd and I was really excited."

"[On vault] I was a little off," continued Booker. "I got too anxious and opened up early, which killed my rotation."

Senior Carl Russ also competed in still rings, placing 41st with a 9.0.

"He didn't have his best performance — he had deductions on two handstands and a tenth (deduction) or two on his mount and dismount," Johnson said.

"He did a nice job to place 41st with all the talent that was there," continued Johnson.

"It wasn't one of my best routines — you just have bad days," Russ said. "Maybe I was a little tired — our timed warm-up was around six and I didn't compete until nine."

The University of Minnesota, ranked number two in the nation, won the regionals with a score of 286.05. Ohio State (281.65) and Penn State (280.85) took second and third, respectively.

Iowa finished fourth with a score of 279.20. The Hawkeyes are coached by Tom Dunn, who coached here at UMass from 1972-1975.

The top 12 performers in each event from both the east and west regions qualify for the NCAA finals. Booker has a strong chance to rank in the top 10 in the nation, according to Johnson.

"I just want to make finals [at nationals]," Booker said. "I'm going to change my routine and make it harder.

"All year [qualifying] has been one of my biggest goals," Booker said. "I realized around the time of the Temple meet [Feb. 18] that I wouldn't be able to unless I got my act together."

Booker certainly has his act together now. What will he perform for an encore on April 19th?

• Marshall captures vault, team places third overall

By JIM CLARK

Freshman sensation Tammy Marshall qualified for the NCAA championships while leading the University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team to a third place finish in this weekend's regionals at Ohio State University.

Marshall earned a trip to Oregon State by winning the vault with a score of 9.6, tied with Penn State's Alison Barber. Marshall was third in the all-around competition with a 37.55.

"There's a strong possibility [Marshall] will be in the all-around, too," said UMass coach Alfie Mitchell.

As a team, the Minutewomen scored a 183.35 to finish behind victorious host OSU (188.175) and Penn State (185.925).

"We're very pleased with the meet," Mitchell said. "We definitely would have liked to finish higher. I think we did a pretty good job for our first time in the meet."

Penn State topped UMass again after winning the Atlantic 10 championships last month. Ohio State, seeded fourth after an inconsistent regular season, stormed

Gorillas survive test from scrappy UNH

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

Dick Garber isn't blowing smoke when he says he doesn't want to face the University of New Hampshire again.

In his 36th and final year as coach of the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team, Garber doesn't take great joy in facing the Wildcats, who are coached by his son, Ted. But in the past, at least Dad was pretty sure of getting a 'W' out of it.

This time, vastly-improved UNH gave the Gorillas fits before UMass pulled away for a 20-15 win Saturday afternoon at The Hill.

"We played hard, but we made some mistakes. UNH is a helluva team," said UM's Garber. "[Ted] and I always have mixed emotions. We want to win, but we hate to see the other lose. In a sense, I'm glad the series is over."

Plus, the Wildcats (4-2) are on the up and up, a far cry from the team that lost here, 17-3 two years ago.

"They've improved a lot. They're the best UNH team I've seen since I've been here," said junior attack Jim McAleavey.

Paced by attackmen Dave Robinson (four goals, assist), Jeff Mechura (two goals, four assists) and Mark Botnick (four goals), UNH lept out to a 4-3 lead after one quarter that had the Granite Staters chirping. But their second eight-goal second quarter of the year gave the Gorillas an 11-8 edge at the half.

McAleavey (four goals, four assists) and senior attacks Scott Hiller and Rob Codignotto (three goals and an assist each) clicked within 1:14 to make it 6-4. UNH drew even again at 7-all before a flurry from McAleavey, Rich Senatore, Hiller and Frank Pepe sent UMass (4-1) into halftime in good shape.

UNH closed to within 11-9 on Paul Talmo's goal 3:38 into the third, but got that close only once more. After Codignot-

Baseball splits pair with Dartmouth

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

It was the type of day when the throwing hand was kept in the back pockets, two batting gloves were worn, and as many layers of clothing as possible were shouldered.

It was a blustery cold day at Lorden Field Saturday afternoon when the University of Massachusetts baseball team and Dartmouth dueled in a double doozy. Dartmouth won the opener, 11-10 in eight innings while UMass took the second game, 5-4.

In game one, a pair of aces faced off against one another, Rich Graham for the Minutemen and Sean Monahan for the Big Green. Neither pitcher was around for the dramatic conclusion.

Graham was shaky in the first inning, allowing six runs, the big blast coming from Tim Carey in the form of a three-run homer. After the first Graham settled down nicely, allowing just one run in the next five innings, but more importantly allowing the team to chip away at a 6-0 Dartmouth lead.

The Minutemen scored a run in the third and added three more in the fourth. Mike Tobin ripped a double which plated Lou Olivieri (three hits), and Ian Torres (4-for-4) doubled home Tobin and Steve Corradi (walk) to close the gap to 6-4.

The score remained that way until the Dartmouth seventh. Brendan Mahoney led off with a triple, John Owens walked and Cam McKennitt reached on Dan Biagini's throwing error. UMass coach Mike Stone replaced Graham with the usually-reliable Jerry Creamer.

Creamer proceeded to walk three of the next six batters, throw two wild pitches and basically allow the Big Green to waltz away with a win, or so everyone thought.

But hold it. The Minutemen had one last chance. Trailing 10-4 going into the last inning, they rallied to score six and tie the game on an assortment of walks, errors, wild pitches and passed balls. Brian Bright capped off the gutsy comeback with a game-tying base hit which scored Torres.

They were never able to score that final one run and as a result, lost the game in the eighth on Creamer's wild pitch on an attempted suicide squeeze.

But that was game one. Creamer and company would bounce back with a good, hard-fought win in the second game.

Dartmouth once again drew first blood by scoring two

Men's tennis opens today

Minutemen seek NE title during final spring season

By GREG SUKIENNEK
Collegian Correspondent

One might think that the University of Massachusetts men's tennis team would be shaken by the recent damage done to its program by budget? this year's trip to the Atlantic 10 Conference tournament was cancelled because of financial woes. They played on cracked, weathered Upper Boyden Courts, scheduled for a facelift three years ago but left unrefurbished because of lack of funds.

Worse still, this season will be the last spring tennis season for the foreseeable future. Bearing all this in mind, what team wouldn't be fazed?

Namely, the UMass men's tennis squad. The Minutemen start their spring schedule today at Rhode Island (3 p.m.) and if the fall season was any indication of future success (8-1, ECAC champions), this final spring may not end in gloom, but in a New England championship.

"This may be our strongest team since I've been here," said seventh-year coach Manny Roberts.

The fact that this year's team won the fall ECAC title and did so with only two upperclassmen on the roster backs up Roberts' assessment.

Among his strongest players are sophomore Barry Wadsworth and freshman Lloyd Teitelbaum, No. 1 and 2 singles seeds. Rounding out the remaining seeds are freshman Jeff Hechemy at third, juniors Paul Audet and Rich Stone at fourth and fifth, and senior captain

Two days dedicated to higher ed.

Workshops led by representatives and open lectures planned

By JULIE LIVINGSTONE
Collegian Staff

The plight and future of state public higher education in Massachusetts will be the focus on college and university campuses across the state tomorrow and Thursday.

The Massachusetts Society of Professors, the union of faculty and librarians on the University of Massachusetts campus support the days' events dedicated to higher education, said John Cole, president of MSP.

A full schedule of workshops is planned for tomorrow from 9 a.m. until 3 p.m. in the Campus Center. A rally in support of public higher education is slated to take place at noon on the Student Union Steps.

Several representatives from MSP, the Tax Equity Alliance of Massachusetts, the Graduate Student Senate and the Physical Plant will lead the workshops. James Collins, former state representative from Amherst and a University alumnus will also offer a presentation. A full schedule of the day will be available in the Collegian tomorrow.

Open lectures will be given by eight University professors during their regular class sessions tomorrow. Professor of anthropology Robert Paynter, will devote his 9:30 a.m. lecture to a discussion entitled: "Race gender and Budget Cuts at UMass" in Machmer W23.

Thursday's events are more directly aimed at gaining legislator's attention with a march through the streets of Boston and a rally on the Statehouse steps scheduled for noon.

Students are asked to "keep it on the Common" to avoid any negative incidences, said UMass student trustee-elect Angus McQuilken.

Fourteen buses for students, faculty, and staff will depart Haigis Mall at 9 a.m. Thursday. Six buses carrying students, faculty, and staff planning to lobby legislators will depart Haigis Mall at 7 a.m. Return time is expected to be between 5 and 6 p.m.

The University administration is sponsoring 10 buses, according to Cole. The Fund for the Future is sponsoring six buses with money raised from last semester's banquet for Bill Cosby. The other four are being funded by Student Government organizations.

Cole said he expects the buses will be filled, adding that he expects even more students to travel to Boston in their own cars.

He advised students who are not lobbying to arrive at Haigis Mall at 8:30 a.m. to secure a seat on a bus.

Tables will be set up on the Campus Center Concourse today from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. for students to sign up as lobbyists, for general information regarding the two days and to consult maps detailing the MBTA routes for those driving to Boston.

"For those who are driving and have extra room in their cars, they are encouraged to stop at the Robsham Visitors Center and pick up people who may not be able to find space on the buses," Cole said.

There are 500 security members from the schools who will be present during the Statehouse rally, some 50 from UMass at Amherst. These are comprised mainly of Resident Assistants and student security members who will be wearing brightly colored tee-shirts so that students can recognize them, Cole said.

"It is said that there will be one security guard for each daffodil," he said.

Another tuition hike proposed

By the Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — Tuition at the state's public colleges and universities is likely to increase at least 10 to 12 percent for the fall, and a panel has recommended that the schools retain about $100 million a year in tuition that now goes into state coffers.

The recommendation to allow schools to retain most of the tuition money would need legislative approval, Terry Zoulas, a spokesman for the Board of Regents, said yesterday. Currently, public colleges and universities maintain only about 15 percent of tuition, or $25 million.

The recommendation to dedicate tuition revenues to the schools comes as the Legislature is attempting to grapple with a budget estimate that exceeds $800 million.

The Board of Regents of Higher Education will vote on next fall's tuitions next month.

Unidentified education officials said the increase will be at least 12 percent, according to sources familiar with the Board thinking.

In the past, the regents have recommended the same percentage increases for all colleges and universities.

Tuition was raised 7.7 percent last year and 8.3 percent the previous year.

The University of Massachusetts now charges about $1,500 in tuition at its Amherst and Boston campuses.

The budget proposed for the 1991 fiscal year calls for spending $48 million less on higher education that this year's budget.

The panel has also recommended that the regents give colleges and universities more latitude in setting tuition. The regents would set a maximum tuition rate, but schools would be allowed to set their own tuitions up to that level, Zoulas said.

The panel's recommendations reportedly were mailed to the presidents last week.

The individual tuition proposal will be controversial. State college officials have asked for a decentralization of the system, but there are those who say individual tui-

UMass student hangs himself in dorm room

Coolidge resident's body discovered by roommate

By MARIA SACCHETTI

A 20-year-old University of Massachusetts sophomore died last night after he apparently hung himself in his room in Coolidge Residence Hall, authorities said.

Richard W. Koster, Jr., of 35 Guinevere Road in North Easton, reportedly was found by his roommate in their room at 1603 Coolidge, according to UMass spokeswoman Karin Sherbin.

UMass police received an emergency call at 5:39 p.m. and responded to the scene where they attempted cardiopulmonary resuscitation, Sherbin said.

Koster was taken by Town of Amherst ambulance to Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton where he was pronounced dead at 6:25 p.m., Sherbin said.

A hospital spokeswoman listed the official cause of death as asphyxiation. She said Koster will be transferred today to the Medical Examiner's office in Springfield where an autopsy will be performed.

Counselors from UMass Mental Health Services were on hand last night at Coolidge to provide support to Koster's friends and floormates, Sherbin said.

Mental Health Services, located in Hills House, also is available to students for additional counseling, she said.

UN ambassador calls for environmental awareness

By PRESTON P. FORMAN

Sir Crispin Tickell, ambassador to the United Nations and a permanent representative on the Security Council of the UN, yesterday called for industry, governments and most importantly human kind to come to grip with problems affecting the global environment.

Tickell, who was appointed to the UN in 1987 and is stepping down later this year to become warden of Green College at Oxford University, said at the "Global Environment and World Affairs" convocation a problem of man's approach to the environment is the time frame of man.

He compared time to the electromagnetic radiation that humans can see, which is visible light. He said humans see only a small portion of the radiation and they look at time in much the same way, only in the near future or past.

"On much smaller change we have trouble grasping ideas if it occurs over a longer period than two or three generations," he said.

Tickell said global environmental problems, such as soil desertification, pollution of oceans and atmosphere and the global warming trend, are products of the Industrial Revolution.

He said one of the greatest environmental problems growing out of the Industrial Revolution facing man is man — overpopulation.

"When I was born the earth's population was 2 billion," he said. "By 2020, it is estimated that there will be 8 billion people on the earth."

He said many environmental problems such as waste disposal and especially acid rain could be eliminated or reduced if governments would cooperate together to solve the problems.

Sharp decline reported in UMass enrollment

By KENDRA PRATT
Collegian Staff

This semester marks the lowest undergraduate enrollment at the University of Massachusetts since 1972, according to an Institutional Studies report.

The report also noted the first decline in graduate enrollment over the last decade.

The Office of Institutional Research and Planning's Enrollment Bulletin for the spring semester reported that the number of full-time students has declined by 1,060 [5.7 percent] since last spring. This drop accelerates a five-semester trend of enrollment decline.

Alan McCardel, a research assistant at Institional Studies, said the reasons for the decline are both economic and demographic.

"We've been in a "Baby Bust," meaning that there are less students coming out of the high schools, for the last five or six years so the number of applicants has gone down," McArdell said.

Brian Harvey, another researcher, said the number of public high school students in Massachusetts has declined by 19,403 from 1979 to 1989. He said this trend is projected to bottom out in 1993, after another 25 percent decrease.

Graduate enrollment has also declined this semester by 240 (3.6 percent) full-time students, the report stated. Spring 1990 marked the first decline of full time graduate students in more than a decade. There has been a 15.4 percent increase in graduate students enrolled in the University's Program Fee, where students are enrolled but not taking classes.

Due to spring tuition and fee increases, some 36 percent of graduate students have changed to part-time enrollment, the report said.

McCardell said fewer part-time undergraduates and non-degree students have enrolled this semester for economic reasons as well.

"Part-time students are more marginal anyway about being able to afford school anymore," McCardel said.

"If the school isn't affordable, then people aren't going to come," McCardell said. "A lot of the decline is driven by the economic climate. Fewer people are choosing to come here."

Rebels: fight the power

By WILLIAM GEORGIADES
Collegian Staff

Speaking at Hampshire College Wednesday to a standing room only crowd Robert Meeropol and Patricia Levassaur, a member of the Ohio 7 who was acquitted last November in Springfield on charges of conspiracy to overthrow the U.S. government, stressed the need for questioning the government, backing up their rhetoric with the results of their own individual struggles.

Meeropol, the son of Ethel and Julius Rosenburg, talked about the trial that convicted his parents of "conspiracy to commit espionage," a trial that resulted in the executions of his parents at the height of the "Communist Witch Hunts" of the 1950s.

The Rosenburgs were accused of stealing the secrets to the Atomic bomb and selling those secrets to the USSR in what J. Edgar Hoover, then head of the FBI called the "greatest crime of the century."

However, as Meeropol pointed out, both in the lecture and in his book "We Are Your Son's" the prosecution's case was extremely weak.

"There was tremendous pressure on the FBI to find out who gave the secret to Russia, " he said, pointing out the weakness of every single piece of tangible evidence brought against the Rosenburgs, including the three main witnesses, the supposed accomplices.

"Why is this relevant today?" Meeropol asked. "Think of Mandela, of the student in front of the tank in Tianaminn Square . . . by resistance people gain power. But that resistance can't just be for a day or an hour, it has to be for generations. In the 70s, I forced the government to release 300,000 pages of materials related to the case, as well as $200,000, and I want to see the government pay in the 90s."

"They never expected my parents to resist the way they did," he said. "If they had confessed to the crime they never committed they would not have died."

He closed by relating a phrase that turned up in his parent's writings in jail: "they were comforted because they were sure others would carry on after them," he said.

Levassaur mentioned that she could see several members of her jury in the audience.

She described the experience of being in jail, as a political prisoner awaiting trial, "shackled to the showers" and of the "privilege of meeting other political prisoners."

"Oliver North tries to overthrow the government in a different way and gets praise and community service," she said. "The disparity between sentences given to Ku Klux Klan members buying guns, or abortion clinic bombers and political prisoners is huge," she said.

"This government fears ideas and resistance."

Message of Passover highlighted

Celebrating freedom of Jews in East Europe

By MEREDITH O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

The weeklong celebration of Passover commemorating the exodus from the Egyptian enslavement of the Jewish people started at sundown yesterday and will take on a special symbol of Jewish freedom this year, said Rabbi Saul Permutter.

"The message of Passover gives us hope that freedom can be ours," Perlmutter said. "This year we can celebrate this powerful message and the new freedom in Eastern Europe."

With the success of recent democracy movements, Jews from Eastern Europe are now free to participate in the once forbidden Passover celebrations, he said.

Perlmutter said this year Jews will hope for the freedom of Ethiopian Jews who are still oppressed and unable to leave the country.

"I think that Passover is one of the most popular Jewish holidays because the families get together to celebrate their freedom," Perlmutter said.

He said the timing of Passover during the advent of spring is ironic. "It occurs during spring, a period of rebirth and vitality, which is symbolic of Jewish freedom."

Passover traditionally begins with a Seder dinner which takes place on the first two evenings of Passover, he said.

The Seder dinner follows a specific order of food while the story of Jewish flight from Egypt is recited aloud from the Haggadah. "[Seder] is meant to be something where we experience, in our minds, what it felt like to be slaves and experience the freedom from slavery," he said.

The meal consists of various foods bearing symbolic meanings. Perlmutter said bitter herbs are served to represent the bitter lives lead by Jewish slaves. Charoset, a mixture of nuts, wine and cinnamon, serves as the mortar of the bricks the slaves made, he said.

Throughout the week, Jews are expected to abstain from products which contain leaven such as bread or yeast products. Instead, they can eat an unleavened bread

Students team up to battle hate mail with panel discussion

By RUSSELL SKELTON
Collegian Staff

Anonymous hate notes have spurred seven University of Massachusetts students to action.

In response to the anti-Semitic and anti-ethnic notes sent to two UMass students and one Amherst resident recently, members of the Third World Caucus, Hillel and the Black/Jewish Coalition formed a joint committee and organized a panel discussion scheduled for tomorrow night to address racism.

Stephanie Pratt, a joint committee member said an aim of the discussion is to let people know what their civil rights are.

"We also want to encourage the reporting of these sorts of incidents," she said. "People need to become more aware of these incidents. Something should be done. These things are wrong."

A skull between two swastikas was at the bottom of the notes. The word "skinheads" was written above the skull. The author of the notes has not been identified.

Pratt said she had no knowledge of the "skinheads" or any other groups like it being active at the UMass.

Assistant District Attorney Winston Burt, Rabbi Saul Perlmutter, Director of the Office of Third World Affairs Sherwood Thompson, Chair of the Amherst Chapter of the NAACP Phyllis Gudger-Porter and a

Nam vet speaks up for revolution

By DAVID FORRESTER
Collegian Staff

"If you're willing to pay the price, you can say any damn thing you want," Brian Willson told a gathering in Northampton Sunday night.

Willson, who has traveled to 28 states and 13 countries since losing his legs, returned from Nicaragua last month. He spoke at a benefit for the Veteran's Education Project, a local program that brings veterans to schools to discuss their war experiences with students.

He said his travels and experiences have led him to advocate a "people's revolution here."

He said American foreign policy is flawed because it is an extension of flawed societal values.

Twisting the army acronym for absent without leave, "AWOL" to stand for the "American Way of Life", Willson said he sees our country "committing suicide."

"AWOL is our god," he said. "We worship it. It's consumption, accumulation, waste and we'll kill anybody and anything in the way of us having what we want."

After his first trip to Nicaragua in 1986, Willson said he decided to become a "peace warrior."

Willson, the Vietnam veteran turned peace activist who lost both of his legs in 1987 trying to block a Navy munitions train in Concord, California, has taken this ethic to heart.

"I didn't know exactly what that meant but, those are the words I used," he said. "I said, 'I'm going back to the United States and I'm going to wage unconditional peace on my life."

In keeping with his rejection of the policies of the U.S. government, Willson, the founder and director of the Institute for the Practice for Nonviolence in San Francisco, said he hasn't paid taxes in the past eight years.

He said his lawyers told him that after his lawsuit against the government for loss of his legs goes to trial in two weeks, the Internal Revenue Service will prosecute him for tax evasion. But, as with other risks he has taken for his ideals, Wilson said he is willing to "pay the price."

"How can I pay my money to a criminal establishment that's killed more people than Hitler," Willson said.

He said if he is sent to prison for tax evasion he will accept it as the consequence for his actions. But, he added, he will not bring his prosthetic legs with him.

"If they want my body, they'll have it on my terms. They can do with me what they want but I'm not cooperating with murder," he said.

Willson encouraged his listeners to join him in his "non-violent revolution of justice."

"It's seems to me that we have a choice as we approach the end of this century," he said. "We can choose to continue to support the reactionary policies and reactionary lifestyles, or we can choose to be revolutionaries against injustice."

He said he is optimistic about the possibility for a change and sees a trend in younger people toward a grassroots revolution.

"The nineties are going to make the sixties look tame," he said.

Law students sit in

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Harvard law students staged another sit-in yesterday over what they called a dearth of minorities and women among faculty members, after the issue sparked protests at law schools nationwide last week.

John Bonifaz, 22, a first-year Harvard law student, said students were planning to sit in the lobby of the office of dean Robert Clark last night. Clark had rejected their demands, including that he recommend the hiring of a Black visiting professor, Bonifaz said.

A spokesperson for the law school, Michael Chmura, denied the dean had rejected the student demands.

"What the dean has said is that he would bring these up with the faculty and the appointments committee this week," Chmura said. "The dean can't make faculty hiring decisions."

Clark told the students in a letter he would meet with them Friday to discuss the issues, Chmura said.

Bonifaz said students had pared down the list of their demands to three. They wanted Clark to recommend to the faculty the hiring of Regina Austin, a Black professor visiting from the University of Pennsylvania. If Austin was not offered tenure, the school should hire a Black woman professor by the fall, the students said.

They also urged the dean to recommend that school policy be changed to allow visiting professors to be offered tenure while they are still on campus.

Student demands last week had included more general calls for changes in the hiring policies of women and minorities. But the protestors decided to focus on Austin because she represented a tangible step the school could take to address its problems, Bonifaz said.

Harvard Law School has not had a Black woman professor yet, Bonifaz said.

"We don't think it unreasonable that when Harvard now has an opportunity to appoint such a person, that the school be pushed to do so," he said.

Bonifaz, who is affiliated with the Hispanic campus group La Alianza, said about 60 people had voted to spend the night.

"Most people are having a study-in," he said.

Last Thursday, students staged a sit-in overnight in conjunction with a national protest against the under-representation of women and minorities on law school faculties throughout the country.

Five percent of Harvard's 61-member tenured faculty are Black men, while women comprise 8.3 percent, according to school figures. Of the school's assistant professors, 40 percent are minorities, while none are women.

Wattleton visits UMass

By AMY HENRY
Collegian Staff

The Distinguished Visitor's Program at the University of Massachusetts is scheduled to present the President of the Planned Parenthood Federation of America, Faye Wattleton, tonight at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

Wattleton will lecture on "Reproductive Rights and Women's Health Care." Time will be allotted for a question and answer period following the lecture.

Mary Anne Antonellis, press coordinator for D.V.P., said: "In a time in which reproductive rights are being threatened Wattleton advocates to protect the rights of all women to make their own decisions in childbearing."

Wattleton has a bachelor's degree in nursing from Ohio State University and a master's degree in maternal and infant health care, with certification as a nurse-midwife from Columbia University.

For the past 12 years Wattleton has led PPFA to the forefront of the reproductive rights movement. "All women, rich and poor, brown, yellow and white must be free to take charge of their lives and make their own personal decisions," Wattleton said. "We have to fight for fundamental human rights so that no women can be denied this dignity, regardless of her situation in life."

PPFA, founded in 1916, is the oldest non-profit voluntary planning organization. It offers a variety of services for men and women such as pregnancy and infertility tests, testing and counseling services for sexually transmitted diseases, abortions and other services.

Hampshire College Civil Liberties and Public Policy Program is also a sponsor of the event.

Tickets are $2 and can be purchased at the door.

D.V.P. will be presenting publisher of "Rock n' Roll Confidential," David Marsh May 8, in the S.U.B. at 8 p.m. Marsh will speak on music censorhip.

tions will create inequities and make higher education less affordable.

Regents say fees have risen 145 percent since 1982, and on some campuses are nearly as much as tuition. Under the proposal, fees and tuition would be combined into a single rate, Zoulas said.

Tuition at the University of Lowell is $1,260 but the total of tuition and fees is about $2,200.

Some say attending a public college or university in Massachusetts is a good deal financially.

Posters mocking Duffey found

By PAMELA PERRAULT
Collegian Correspondent

Police discovered graffiti and posters at the main entrance of the Whitmore Administration Building Sunday relating to Chancellor Duffey's recent proposal before the Board of Trustees concerning the Graduate Employee Organization.

In red paint the words read, "GEO, Duffey, fair elections, and recognized." There were also posters found with characterizations of Chancellor Duffey.

In other police reports:

More on the new order

Events in Europe, which are changing the complexion of societies there, are being ignored by the people of the Third World to their peril. Here are a few points to ponder:

The economic integration of Europe — Despite Gorbachev's monkey wrench, the economies of Europe will eventually be integrated.

K.G. Jayanath

By 1992 western Europe plans on becoming an economic fortress. While the members of the Economic Community will be trading freely with each other, manufactured products not made in Europe will be taxed out of the market.

A united Europe plans to eliminate any form of competition from other countries, especially the Third World. Nations like the U.S. and Canada have enough money invested in the economies of Europe not to be excluded from the European market.

Virtually all major European currencies are valued higher than the currencies of the Third World, in part a factor of the legacy of colonialism when exchange rates were imposed at gun-point.

Many of the Third World economies, integrated into the world economies during colonialism, have not escaped the debilitating effects of being raw material suppliers.

The role of the U.S. military and the American courting of China — The American military is designed primarily as an invasion force. Politicians as well as military planners have successfully implanted in the minds of many Americans that 'defensive' military actions are fought in other countries.

American military adventures overseas have been predicated on the proposition that the peoples of the Third World are not sophisticated enough to deal with the evils of communism.

With the apparent demise of communism, it would seem that the U.S. would play a leading role in the isolation of China, which is still doggedly trying to cling to traditional communist doctrines.

However, this is not the case. The U.S. government has gone out of its way not to alienate the Chinese. The answer lies in the American relationship with countries of the Third World.

Now that the Soviet Union has been neutralized, China remains the only possible option for help, in terms of weapons. The U.S. has no intention of leaving Third World countries to acquire the required weaponry to preserve some vestige of independence.

The role of Japan — In its trade relationship with the U.S., Japan reports a 55 billion surplus. Japanese investments overseas, which are overseen by a government agency called MITI, include 50 billion dollars invested in the U.S. Despite the trade imbalance, the outflow of money from the U.S. is relatively small.

Japan has to be the key in any economic strategy to counter 'Fortress Europe' and, somewhere down the line, 'Fortress North America.' If the Europeans succeed in their designs for EC92, then it is the beginning of the end to 'free trade' and the beginning of a new era of economic trading blocs.

One of the primary purposes of these blocs will be to prevent the transfer of technology, by preventing western capital from going after cheap labor, especially in the Third World. And what better way to do this than to choke the cheap-labor products in a consumer market.

Japan, despite South Africa's crude attempts at conferring it an 'honorary' white status, is not Caucasian. Still, it would be extremely naive on the part of the Third World to elicit some form of solidarity from Japan based on color.

Japan, like other nations, acts primarily from economic motives. This is where countries need to devise a comprehensive strategy to combat this brand-new scheme to perpetuate the old economic order.

World problems second to comic

When I first came here as a freshman last year, I started to read the Collegian, just like most of the students on campus. The paper was great: national and world news briefs, great comics, and lots of campus news.

But lately, I have become disenchanted with your paper. I stress the "your" because I feel it is no longer a paper I can relate to, or even the overwhelming majority of the campus can relate to. World and national news stories are few and far between, the comics have gone steadily downhill, and campus news stories are becoming highly specific and targeted towards representing certain "groups."

The epitome of all this is the debate over the special interest pages. Every group wants its own page. The paper that was once meant for the entire university has now become a soap box for anyone with a bone to pick. Who do these people hope to reach by having their own specialized page?

Those most likely to read the page are those who can identify most closely with the page's title. What is wrong with a "Multicultural Page," where anybody can peruse through it in hopes of finding something either of interest? Segregated pages simply stress societal segregation.

It has gotten to the point that I now pick up the paper simply to find out what is for lunch, and to find out the latest in the goings-on of Calvin and Hobbes. Now I can't even do that!

The Collegian seems to be getting too wrapped up in catering to the wants of an outspoken few, instead of trying to be a generally-appealing college newspaper.

BRING BACK CALVIN, AND STOP TRYING TO SOLVE THE WORLD'S PROBLEMS!!

Normal not always majority

It is my opinion that homosexuality, like heterosexuality and bisexuality, is not necessarily a cause or an effect of mental illness, nor is it unnatural or abnormal. It just is!

Chris Macek

Let me direct your attention to research and findings over the past two decades in the field of Human Psychology and Psychiatry. Given that this is the general framework in which concepts of mental health originate, it makes sense to ask what these fields, as a whole, have to say about it.

In 1973, The American Psychiatric Association, revised its Diagnostic and Statistical Manual, and removed homosexuality from its list of disorders. Concluding, after considerable research, that "Homosexuality per se implies no impairment in judgment, stability, reliability or general social or vocational capabilities."

Two years later, the American Psychological Association followed suit, and removed homosexuality from its list of mental disorders.

If one now claims that homosexuality is a disorder, without further evidence and in spite of research and findings to the contrary over the past two decades, then this is obviously nothing more than an opinion.

This opinion, however, carries over an entire population of people, and is hence a prejudice. I can't see a prejudice, which deems all homosexuals to be sick, as anything but irrational, hateful and homophobic. Call me radical.

I find this particular prejudice extremely disturbing because it was just such reasoning a little more than fifty years ago that "justified" people in their efforts to "cure" homosexuality. Treatments ranging from frontal lobotomies to electric shock weren't uncommon, and they were actually sanctioned by the medical establishment.

What is "natural" is usually nothing more than a social construct. For instance, is kissing natural? Is that what our lips were made for? Who made out lips?

Is heterosexual sex natural because that's how they fit together "naturally?" Well, they only fit together "naturally" if both people are naked, facing one another, approximately the same height, and pressed together either forcefully or cooperatively.

Inasmuch as homosexual behavior has occurred in every human culture, in every historical period and is exhibited by countless other species within the animal kingdom, it is and has always been part of nature; it is thus natural. Any gay or lesbian will say that there's nothing unnatural about their feelings or expression of love, sexual or otherwise, for someone of the same sex.

As with most things in our experience, sexuality covers a broad range of behaviors, not separable and discrete categories. Homosexuality is one end of a spectrum of sexually-exhibited behaviors, and it occurs as a normal variation in all populations.

"Normal" does not mean majority. Roughly 10 percent of the population is homosexual. Given that only 50 percent is strictly heterosexual, we can't say that either is abnormal. If 99 percent were heterosexual and only 1 percent were homosexual, things might be different, but that's just not the case.

Homosexuality is as healthy, natural and normal as heterosexuality and bisexuality.

If you would like further information and/or specific published sources, the UMass Program for Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Concerns has the most extensive collection of books, journals and periodicals on campus and it's free and open to the public.

Descendants need history

There are approximately 350,000 Cape Verdeans in America, a number considerably higher compared to the actual population living in the Islands. A considerable amount of us settle in regions such as Boston, New Bedford, Rhode Island and California.

Eugene J. Barros

The official language spoken in Cape Verde is Portuguese lending to the fact that it belonged to one of the Portuguese colonies. But the language spoken by the natives is a dialect called "Kriolo," which is a mixture of Portuguese and other West African dialects predominantly influenced by the Senegalese dialect.

One major challenge we as Cape Verdeans face is identity. Most of us identify ourselves as Cape Verdeans in the United States, but others identify themselves as Portuguese and ignore their African heritage. Consequently, there's been a loss of identity among many Cape Verdeans in United States and racism is the cause — plain and simple.

Years ago when sailors from Cape Verde arrived to United States in whale ships, they encountered racism the minute they set foot in the new land. In order for them to obtain any job in that time period, they had to lie about their African heritage and instead identify with their European master (Portuguese).

Having settled in the new land they had children who in turn were brainwashed and made to believe that they were Portuguese. Until this day, this deception is an on-going process although it has somewhat diminished.

The problem is more severe among Cape Verdeans who are American-born compared to the people who came directly from the Islands. There are many Cape Verdean students in UMass who do not identify themselves as such, take part in any Cape Verdean student activities or interact with the rest of us.

In all the regions where Cape Verdeans live in United States, similar problems exist. Many of them refuse to recognize the Cape Verdean culture, tradition and, most of all, avoid speaking the native language so that they will not be perceived as Cape Verdeans.

Once again the slavery institution is to blame for this tragic dilemma. The Europeans went to Africa and taught us that anything black is evil and savage. They came to civilize us and make us decent beings.

Thus many Cape Verdeans appear to have lost their self-esteem and don't want to have anything that's African.

The following passage will illustrate the seriousness of the issue.

Take a young woman whom I met last year at a party celebrating African heritage, who introduced herself to me as Portuguese. She said that she had come into this country at a very young age and didn't speak Portuguese. In a mood of total amazement, I examined her from head to toe and she resembled all the characteristics of a black person.

Knowing that all Portuguese are white, I asked her, with pretentions of offense, if there was such thing as a black European. After that question, she realized that she was Cape Verdean. In the end, she learned many things about herself that she never knew, and promised to do further soul-searching.

Now tell me, when are you going to be proud of Mother Africa, of what you are and not what other people want you to be, of your roots and culture? Do you want to remain an ignorant, brainwashed modern slave lost in a white man's country?

The time to come out of the closet is now, brothers and sisters. You can never fully be a man or a woman if you have no knowledge of your own history. As the famous Jamaican-born black leader Marcus Garvey once said, "A man without a history is like a tree without its roots."

BLACK AFFAIRS

Maki Mandela speaks out at discussion

By DAWN PIERCE
Collegian Staff

Maki Mandela, daughter of recently released South African activist Nelson Mandela, spoke candidly Sunday at the Sunset Gallery in the Southwest Residential Area on issues concerning South Africa. The program was a presentation of the House Council.

The program was informal. The format was a basic question and answer discussion. The purpose for holding such an event was to give students a chance to learn more about the real issues facing South Africa and to ask about any information they received that may have been unclear to them. Maki Mandela made it very clear to the discussion group she was there not there to speak on behalf of all South Africans; she was only giving her personal opinions, and relatively factual information.

Mandela said she felt the sanctions against South Africa were brought about to bring down the system of Aparhteid existing presently in that country. She said the South African government depends on Black labor to heavily support its economy. Without Black labor, she said the economy of the country would crumble. Along with the fact that, South Africa was once a British colony, it has other ties with England. England has invested a lot of money in doing business with the South African government. Mandela said if England were to pull out and divest economically, its economy would suffer greatly. The British economy depends on South African investments and a divestment would result in tremendous unemployment.

Mandela did not neglect to mention the fact that the labor movement in England supports Blacks in South Africa and the anti-Apartheid movement in England through their labor movement is very active. In speaking about the western world, Mandela said that citizens of this country should ask themselves how sincere is our government to the disbanment of Apartheid. She said she could not tell us what other actions our government should take to aid the effort of divestment but rather we should decide on our own. Mandela spoke of how the United States claims to be the preserver of democracy in the free world. She cited how they intervened in Vietnam, Latin America and the Middle East but as of yet they have not taken serious actions to intervene in South Africa. Mandela posed the question: "Why can't the U.S. intervene in South Africa ?"

In order to understand the whole situation in South Africa today, Mandela said one has to understand the history of the liberation movement. The struggle for liberation started in the 1700s. Blacks themselves never took up arms to protest laws which they viewed as unfair and illegal. She said " they are prepared to be nonviolent and peaceful." It is only when the government through military forces has reacted in violence that they resort to violence as a defense mechanism. She said " we have to react in this unfortunate situation. If the South African government wants to see an end to violence, then it should stop its own violence."

Mandela told of how many South African Blacks die daily due to malnutrition and starvation. She said 3,000 Black children die every year from malnutrition and starvation. She said that in our schools we are taught that S. African Blacks are violent people " we are not violent people." In comparing South Africa to the U.S., Mandela said it was only when the Black youth went to the streets to protest and take action that the White society changed their minds. Nonviolent and peaceful demonstrations are not always successful, according to Mandela. She said sometimes you have to be violent to protect yourself against violence.

One student asked how Maki Mandela compared her father to other famous Black leaders such as Malcolm X. She responded by saying that in her opinion, her father is a combination of Malcolm X, and Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., because the theories and methods of both leaders are implemented into that of her father's. Specifically comparing her father to Malcom X, Mandela said she agreed that talking does not always solve problems and she believes that many Black youth in this country feel the same way. Violence is used as a last tactic.

Mandela said not all of the reasons for the existence of Apartheid are economic. If that were the case, she said you would see the Black and White poor of South Africa working together to change the situation, but you don't.

She said: "For me it is only a race issue and a social construction." Some White South Africans justify the oppression of Blacks by saying that there reason for coming to the country was to protect the Blacks from killing themselves; therefore, they felt they had to divide the tribal groups. This is yet another tactic used to keep Blacks from coming together to fight apartheid in a unified fashion.

Another student stated in discussion that in his interaction with White South Africans, he was told the dismantling of Apartheid would cause total chaos in the country. Mandela responded by saying, "It is impossible to expect everyone to agree on everything, but all Blacks in South Africa agree on the fundamental issue."

When asked her perception of the media's role in her country to perpetuate and support Apartheid, Mandela said, "All Whites have their own agenda. We do not control our media." She also said that in the western world, the media does not provide sufficient coverage of issues and concerns of Black South Africans. She said the only way to really find out what is going on there is to speak with a Black South African to get the "real story."

Maki Mandela answered questions on South Africa and her father, Nelson Mandela, who was released from a Cape Town prison in February after 27 years of imprisonment.

Commenting on how White South Africans say they have contributed greatly to the economy, Mandela said when the British and Dutch came to South Africa, they had nothing. They did not bring livestock from Europe to South Africa and the land they occupied did not belong to them.

She said: "They have stolen our land, our livestock, everything we owned. We owned everything before Whites came to South Africa in 1652." Everything that exists in South Africa was built by a Black man, not White.

Mandela said although many South African Whites feel if Blacks were to gain their rightful freedom they would not be able to properly run their government, that "we are intelligent and capable of running the country very well."

Growing up as Nelson Mandela's daughter, Maki Mandela said there have been positive and negative aspects of it. She said many people think it must be great but "you carry a lot of burden of society. You have to fit into the setting blocks created for you." She said if you don't live up to these expectations, you are looked down upon and stereotyped. Being Nelson Mandela's daughter has had some benefits. She was able to attend a White university when at the time it was not possible. Being Nelson Mandela's daughter has also closed some doors for her. Simply because she is who she is, some people refuse to deal with her.

The last issue of the discussion was Mandela's personal opinion of South Africa's President de Klerk. She said the announcement of his decisions was not of his own intentions, but rather the changes was a result from the strength of the people. The government could no longer control the townships. She is suspicious of de Klerk and in her opinion, his administration says they want changes, but fail to implement programs that would result in constructive changes.

Minority open house held for potential students

By DAWN PIERCE
Collegian Staff

On April 7, 1990, an open house for minority students was held at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. Aqulia Ayanna-McCants, the assistant director of admissions and University staff members, faculty and students coordinated the program to assist students accepted to UMass decide if they wish to attend the University.

Panels for academic counciling, student life and financial aid were arranged for parents and students to learn more about University services available to them. During lunch held at the Campus Center Auditorium, speaker Eric Nakajima said a few words of encouragement to students. Ric Townes, assistant dean of Academic Support Services gave an informative introduction of the keynote speaker State Rep. Raymond Jordan.

Jordan attended Springfield public schools, is a former graduate of UMass, a member of the National Democratic Committee and has been a member of the state legislature for over 16 years.

Jordan opened his address by asking all of the students attending to stand up and take a look around themselves. This he said was to give the class of 1994 an overall view of themselves and future classmates. Jordan said by the students observing each other, they will soon realize that "what you see is not necessarily the whole story."

Jordan said he considered himself to be one of the biggest advocates for affordable public higher education. Due to increased budget cuts, Jordan said we should not lose the idea of public higher education as one of the most important issues; and that without more assistance to public education, for many people, their chances to attend a state college or university would be very dim.

Jordan urged students to accept responsibility for their futures and to place their priorities in the proper perspective. He quoted singer Ziggy Marley, "If you don't know your future, you can't know your past."

Jordan gave an example of how children attending schools today do not receive a proper education in history, especially Black history. When asked, the school children could not name at least ten famous Black historians. Although they had knowledge of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. and Booker T. Washington, that was the extent of their knowledge of Black history.

They knew The Cosby Show was the number one television show and that Good Times was one of the first shows to air with an all Black cast. In light of this, Jordan asked the children what is the difference between the two programs. They answered him by saying that in Good Times, the family had to struggle to achieve, and that on The Cosby Show, the people were affluent, professional Blacks. Considering this, Jordan related the past struggles of Black people to the time periods at which Good Times aired, and to how more and more Blacks are achieving their goals despite obstacles set forth in today's society. Jordan said informal education is received, but formal education in the classroom is neither well presented nor received.

Jordan told students when encountering situations and persons unlike themselves to not make assumptions or stereotypes. Instead he said they should take the time to get to know the issues or persons on an individual basis. He said it is very important to get a multicultural education, particularly at a large university such as UMass where the opportunities exist. Jordan said understanding why you are here today will help students to take control of your future and appreciate what sacrifices were made on their behalves in order to have the opportunities that exist for the students' advantage.

"If you don't know your future, you can't know your past", and vice versa.

In order to give students encouragement to persevere in today's world, Jordan said they should not let barriers such as racism or sexism to discourage them. He said they must take a positive outlook on life.

"The bottom line is to get through the maze. Educate your mind formally and informally," he said.

Viewing changes in the world today like the Berlin wall and the freeing of Nelson Mandela, Jordan told students not to concern themselves with traditional career patterns, he said "the world is the arena."

One man brings Asia home

By ANTONIA MAGUIRE

I'm on a Mission From Buddha
New World Theater
Saturday, April 7

Lane Nishikawa's one-man performance of "I'm On A Mission From Buddah," was a profound insight into the lives of Asian-Americans that achieved success through the fluidity of stand-up comedy and improvisation and the drama of a carefully scripted work.

Nishikawa's opening sketch attacked the issue of the plight of the Asian-American actor who is so often forced into insulting stereotypical roles in order to survive. Playing the part of a stand up comic, Nishikawa was able to hit his audience with his vital message in one of the most receptable of genres. From there he constructed an extremely funny bar scene in which he played an Asian-American being given the come-on by a blond with a very tall, very jealous and very racist boyfriend from Illinois.

On the subject of the strength of the Japanese nation, Nishikawa's brilliantly written sketch entitled "Way Of The Warrior," contained such classic lines as "Timex gets a licking whilst Seiko keeps on ticking," and a pace that set the standard for the rest of the performance.

"Sushi Bar" followed, with Nishikawa playing a total of three parts - a White-American father and son reunited after seventeen years and the Japanese-American proprietor of a sushi bar. In this lengthy piece Nishikawa successfully sent up the yuppie trying to impress his father with his "sushi bar language," and the father's disgust at being offered the delicacy over hamburger coupled with his WW2 racism.

The total of eighteen sketches performed by Nishikawa touched upon a great many other subjects regarding Asian Americans, including the way in which many of them are still treated nearly half a century on from World War Two. Ending his selection of comic and dramatic genres which included an entire rap sequence, Nishikawa left his audience with the words "As the years roll on, Asian-America where have you gone?" and the image that Asian-Americans are "assimilating faster than a 300zx."

Founded in 1973, The Asian American Theater Company has premiered more than 35 original plays by Asian-American authors. The development of new writing voices continues to be of utmost importance to AATC, who will develop a slate of new works this season as part of its Plays and Playwrights' Development Program, culminating this Spring in the "AATC FESTIVAL OF NEW ASIAN AMERICAN PLAYS."

Play finds humor in horror

Somewhere Over the Balcony
Hampshire College
Saturday, April 7

Three women stood on a sparsely set stage and vividly created the world of Northern Ireland's Divis Flats on the anniversary of the internment, in which bombing, unemployment and intense political strife is the norm. The extraordinary part of it is they made it funny.

Marie Jones, Eleanor Methven and Carol Scanlan of the Belfast Charabanc Theater Company performed their original play, Somewhere Over the Balcony. The characters' real Belfast accents, which took the audience a while to get used to, added to the fresh, innovative style which made light of something which otherwise would seem tragic.

Dialogue of the play was often interrupted with helicopter engines and bomb explosions. However, the women tried to make the most of the situation.

One character ran a shop, "Ceely's Riot Souvenir Shop," in which she collected things such as riot helmets and gas masks to sell to any tourists in the area.

The black comedy included music that brought out the best of the actresses. They harmonized beautifully, in a mock Greek chorus type fashion, expressing their Catholic woes amid the presence of the "Brits" whom the audience never saw, but definitely felt through the women's actions.

From these women's perspectives, the audience saw the crisis in northern Ireland, not as a specifically Catholic or Protestant problem, but as a human dilemma. The women found normality in the military chaos and preserved their sanity with humor. Although the setting of the play is politically loaded, it appeals to a wide audience because it focuses on not on how many bombs are dropped on the city each week, but on the women's day-to-day survival in such a place.

This situation is not to be dismissed as trivial by any stretch of the imagination. The play is laughable because it shows the human side of what some see as a dismal existence. The characters convinced the audience that not only is it okay to laugh at the tragic, it is sometimes necessary to get through it.

Morrissey magical

By JULIE LIVINGSTONE
Collegian Staff

Bill Morrissey
Iron Horse
Friday, April 6

Bill Morrissey appeared more jubilant than his tragically humorous lyrics would let on when he played the Iron Horse Friday night.

With only his acoustic guitar and Craig Eastman on mandolin, Morrissey was the symbolic epitome of a laid back New England day when all you want to do is listen to some funny anecdotes and hear a talented song writer woo your mind.

His songs last no longer than they have to, relaying a line that is simultaneously sarcastic and sad.

"Live Free or Die" is the tale of a man jailed for killing his wife's lover and dreading each morning because his job is printing out licence plates with the granite state's motto, "Live Free or Die."

Before setting off on a nature-filled tour of his life, he warned the audience he "had once been Catholic, but now I flyfish."

In "Fisherman's Dream," he brings thought and emotion back to what it must have been like to see the world from a child's perspective. "When I fished as a kid the seasons dragged/I never saw time pass/But when I left home/Every road led back here/...I dream of when I was nine again and it seemed like the summer would never end/...I see the full moon shine like a whiffle ball."

Eastman and Morrissey met on Tuesday, practiced for three days, then performed. It barely showed, as Eastman's finesse with the mandolin and Morrissey's lyrical sense made up for that lapse. It's just unfortunate the sound system (a wiring problem) couldn't cooperate.

Gongora and Grillo dissapoint, Auger amazes

By SAAD HOPKINS
Collegian Staff

The Lambada Trio: as always, art proves the utter irrelevance of art criticism.

Lionel Gongora, from Colombia, and John Grillo, from Italy have decided to expose us to their backgrounds via their art. Hispanic art is often very colorful, and American art collectors have rather had a hard time stomaching this.

Unfortunately, Grillo, who has been heavily influenced by South American art, and Gongora have done nothing to encourage this desperately needed appreciation. It's not that their harrowing and grizzly images are positive or negative, as they simply don't have any effect at all. They are ambiguous and trite.

Grillo's pieces scream out "this is art, damnit!," but they lack the depth, and don't promote the emotion they seek. Well intended but stagnant, they suffer from misdirection.

The subjects in his paintings are pale, thin, bony figures with striking features that instantly capture one's attention. They are pasted against a background of chaotic serendipitous colors that blend together in a manner that enhances their Gothic and childish benevolence. One of the more interesting points of Grillo's paintings is that his subjects give all indication of social wear and tear, but refuse to let go of their identities or desires. These are very weak works of art that are very difficult to interpret accurately, which, I guess, is the main point of art.

In contrast, ex-Hampshire College student, Stephen Auger's, paintings are excellent. They are the epitome of good stereotypical post-post modern art. They pursue a harmonic use of color as light, and look like a television channel in between receptions in Technicolor. Anyone under the influence of LSD would be amazed.

These simple works are hallucinogenic. Oil and glass on linen canvas using an innovative line technique translate to a fine manipulation of the nature of wave vibration. The moment you understand them, you see they're detailed, brilliant and ethereal.

Such a severe refraction of light, the illusions of color versus their actual displacement gives even more insight into the concept of a fourth dimension. What a brilliant scheme. One is amazed at the way the human eye perceives the colors. Unlike Grillo and Gongora's pieces, it is altruisticly color wise.

Auger's paintings are on display until April 30 at R. Michaelson Gallery, Amherst. Grillo and Gongora's exhibit runs through April 28 at Fauve Gallery, Amherst.

Oat Pearl, another Cure clone band with potential

Oat Pearl

I think I understand the idea behind Oat Pearl, even though you have to try hard to ignore the strong Cure influences. This tape doesn't scream brilliance, and it's style is something other than what I usually leave in my tape deck. However Oat Pearl is very good. David "Blowhair" Beaupre, is an extremely talented musician who has a strong knowledge of musical arrangements and knows how to manipulate the pop formula.

Every musician has his or her role, and the band is tight. This six song tape proves that after months of hard work, a worthy final product does well. Only the opening songs on side a and side b don't work. However, "Merricks Butie" is a fine tune with a melodic guitar line that holds this listeners interest. "Jesus Loves The Nail (That's for Sure)" is funny, poppy, but not the pop that eats itself. "I See Everything" doesn't cut the mustard though. Beaupre's voice is so reminiscent of Robert Smith that it immediately gets fast forwarded when the tape is put on. But when Yvette Perez sings "Breed With You," all flaws are put aside, although her keyboard playing could use some improvement.

All in all it's a good tape that's worth owning.

Albums are rated from one to five stars, with five being the best.

Lynch makes TV peak

By SAAD HOPKINS
Collegian Staff

David Lynch perfected his demented style of film making with his masterpiece Blue Velvet three years ago, and now he is continuing this tradition with his latest project Twin Peaks.

This pilot, that premiered Sunday on ABC, is a scary insight into the not so pure small town world. Peaceful images have been created of small towns, and now Lynch wants to show you the other side that's hidden. Here is a slice of the netherworld, where everyone thinks things are perfect, only to realize the hellish stench that exists underneath.

You wouldn't want to live in Twin Peaks. The best way to describe this place would be to imagine living in Medford; a place where the men are real men, and the cops hang out drinking coffee. The town is hell, and it took the murder of teenager Laura Palmer for the rest of the citizens to see why. The characters (some of them) pose a serious threat to humanity. Bobbie is a two-timming, beer-drinking, stupid SOB who lacks direction, and character for that matter. He and his best friend Mike are on the football team, and both are such horrid characters that they're perfect together, perfect symbols of small town youth.

We don't know anything about Laura, after all she's dead when we enter Twin Peaks, but as the tension mounts and time flies, we do find out that she's been selling a bit more than Girl Scout cookies to make a quick ten grand. And here is our plot base for the next two hours. Who killed her? The answer isn't simple, and thus enters hotshot FBI agent Dale Cooper, played flawlessly by Kyle MacLachlan. With an appetite for investigating the morally bankrupt, this ultra-mega yuppie who knows his stuff, throws everyone aback with his citified awkwardness. ("It's nice being in a town where the yellow light means slow down instead of speed up.") He runs around talking into his tape recorder while producing the shocking evidence. You know he's going to find his man (or woman?). You don't like him, nor do you want to.

One of the greatest things about Twin Peaks is the way Lynch pays close attention to detail, and the way he shows us things that we overlook each day in a small town: Laura's mother chain smokes her neurosis away, a moose head lies on the table, it seems, for no reason; "It must have fallen,' is the conclusion. The sherrif's secretary has a whiny helium-induced voice and eavesdrops on every conversation. The men in the movie, especially the cops, break down in tears more than the women. The real small town mentality has never been so realistically captured. Now maybe other people in small towns like this one can watch and see a bit of themselves. Everyone is bland and generic, but no one is boring.

Lynch has written a marvelous teleplay full of fascinating curiosities, and his direction couldn't be topped. No one is like Lynch, and you'll have a hard time finding anything else like Twin Peaks. When it's over you don't know what to think, and thinking about it is irritating. Those seeking conventional entertainment won't understand it's dark humor, or enjoy being drained by it. It's like watching Knot's Landing or One life To Live on acid. Brilliant.

Gilbert breathes experience into music and attitude

Ronnie Gilbert
Iron Horse
Thursday, April 5

After just seeing Laurie Anderson's show at Smith College, Ronnie Gilbert's performance last Thursday was a real shock. Just looking at the stage I knew it was going to be a polar opposite. No more bouquets of microphones popping up from spindly black tables, each bunch containing a vocoder and electronic voice filters. Instead of the impressive three-paneled screen that had different films and slides going on at the same time, there was an iron horse hanging up near the front window and a well-used grand piano on the stage floor.

Even so, as soon as Ronnie Gilbert's name was announced, there was rowdy applause full of quick shouts around the room and a standing ovation that followed the end of the show. She jumped into Bessie Smith's blues number, "Nobody Knows When You're Down and Out" and then, suddenly, explained that she changed the words to fit her own life in "No Rockin' Chair." Singing and dancing to Libby McLaren's piano accompaniment, she sang, "Don't Put Me in No Rockin' Chair, 'till I need it."

Later in the show, she imitated a fun-loving old woman at a home for the elderly in Ruth Pelham's "Activity Room." Although aging was obviously on her mind, her presence and uninhibited voice, radiating power without pretentiousness, put off the very idea for at least a few decades.

Aging was only the first of Gibert's concerns. "Have you heard of the Anti-Choice bill in Idaho?" she asked the audience. In explaining how women's efforts forced the law to be vetoed, she said the women boycotted "potatoes, ski trips, whatever it takes." The audience applauded.

The next song, "Silos," was about the fears of an officer who constantly waits for a signal to launch nuclear missiles. Minor keys drifted into the softer notes of "Love Will Find a Way," which is also the name of her 1989 album.

"Among the weeds of worry," she sang, "A seed of hope can sprout."

"Marie," by Laura Berkson, was based on a true story about two women who went to court for the right to dance together at their school prom. Winning the case, the couple waltzed across the dance floor, one in a gown, the other in a tuxedo.

"Same Boat Now," sung partly in Spanish, was about the joining of America's different races and nationalities.

The evening reached its emotional peak when Libby McLaren performed "Ticking," which she dedicated to her friend who had died of AIDS. Simple and pretty notes mixed with her honest voice made tears run down my face. A respectful silence followed this song, along with a reluctant, hushed applause.

Ronnie Gilbert succeeded in raising our spirits with the help of Linda Lamitola, a signer for the deaf who signed the song "Happy Birthday Mrs. Miller," about a 93-year-old woman who received 93 presents.

Jazz numbers by Chippy Hill and Leadbelly were introduced by Gilbert's conviction, "None of us would be out here without black music."

Included in her encore, she sang "Bread and Roses," which commented on the has-been sixties generation with "Whoever thought that the '60s would be called the good old days?" Promising future hope, she sang, "Younger hands will take our work and carry on."

Although the more contemporary artist, Laurie Anderson, has also expressed similar political ideas, Gilbert's opinions are different in that they ring with experience. While Anderson told me, "I don't know how conservative this country's gonna get," Gilbert has more to offer. "This country's going backwards," she said. "It's not that much different from the '50s, but I've seen this before. It's a cycle, but we have to be hopeful and put our energy towards fighting for what we believe in."

Dancing with twelve inches

By CHRISTINA ROSETTI
Collegian Correspondent

Young MC — "I Come Off"
(Delicious Vinyl)

Young MC is "coming off" of his big success with "Bust A Move" with this hype new 12-inch. This college-educated rapper manages to lay an intelligent narrative about his rapping career over a beat which will make you move. It's a little slower than "Bust A Move," and it includes great supporting female vocals which should keep this song in your head for a long time.

David Bowie — "Fame 90"
(EMI)

Okay, okay, I know that all the die-hard Bowie fans are probably going to scream when I tell you that one of the cuts on this 12-inch is done with rap diva Queen Latifah. But don't scream yet, it's not that bad. Actually, Queen Latifah lends a hip new outlook to this 1975 Bowie/Lennon production. The original lyrics are still there, with fresh new beats to back them up, and if you don't like rap there's also a house, hip-hop and a kind of techno-rock mix on the 12-inch. "Fame 90" makes its appearance in the new Richard Gere movie, Pretty Woman.

Hi Tek 3 — "Spin That Wheel"
(SBK/Capitol)

Following in on the heels of the Technotronic sensation is a European smash called Spin That Wheel, and with Ya Kid K and mixes by Jo Bogert (both of Technotronic) there's no way you can miss the "pump up the jam" sound. Pumping along at an aerobics-in-hell pace, "Spin" includes great edits and drop-ins which keep the song from fading into monotony. This song appears on the soundtrack from the Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles movie, a sign that house is making its way into mainstream pop music.

Shana — "You Can't Get Away"
(Vision Records)

This 17-year-old from Miami is proving, along with the Cover Girls and Sweet Sensation, that the Latin/Miami sound is still viable as top 40. Following up on her hit "I Want You," "You Can't Get Away" is making its club break out across the nation. Expose's mastermind producers, Martinee and Alonso, have written a song which showcases Shana's singing ability without the annoying repetitiveness of her first single. Also, the 12-inch mix includes a def rap by Fresh Jeff which doesn't appear on the radio edit.

'Mystery Train hurtles nowhere with a smile

By WILLIAM GEORGIADES

Mystery Train
Academy of Music

A young Japanese couple argue about whether Elvis or Carl Perkins is the King. An Italian woman sees Elvis' ghost. And an English man goes on a stumbling drunken night with a loaded gun.

Three simple little tales make up this film that has legends like Screaming Jay Hawkins playing the nightclerk of the divey hotel that all of these related characters end up in. Joe Strummer plays the drunken Englishman exactly as you'd expect him to. But Memphis, in all of its seedy glory is the real star of this film, along with director/writer Jim Jarmusch.

Down By Law and Strangers in Paradise were both efforts in cinema-verite. What's strange, then, is that both are so hugely entertaining. Downbeat to the extent of stroking one's funny bone, just as life does.

Mystery Train is comprised of three vignettes, all interrelated through, among other things, the radio voice of Tom Waits, who incidentally had his best role to date as a down and out D.J. in Jarmusch's Down By Law.

The first piece concerns a young couple visiting Memphis from Japan. Their wide eyed wonder of this seedy, broken down town and their relating with one another is hilarious, a study in subtleties that smacks of everyday life.

The second part, concerning an Italian woman stuck in Memphis on her way to Italy, meets up with a woman leaving her boyfriend. They share a room, the second woman talks about her shambles of a love life, sleep and wake to a gunshot.

"What was that," asks the American.

"A .38," says the Italian.

The third section finds Joe Strummer sitting in a Black bar complaining, raving and waving a loaded gun around. To avoid any problems two friends take him out for a drive. A liquor store owner gets shot in the heart after saying "I'm the man who's going to make you use that thing." We don't feel too bad about the murder because a racial slur initiated it, and besides the characters now have two bottles of Butcher's Whiskey. They drive and drive and drive, in scene after repeated scene, drinking, sleeping, smoking and drinking.

Finally they repair to Screamin' Jay Hawkins hotel, breaking a whiskey bottle on the way in. The bell boy sweeps up the mess and throws it out into the street. Things progress till all three scenes are connected in a sensible way.

Here's the problem with Jarmusch's movies. They're so close to perfection on every level that they can't help but inspire incessant chatter, speculation and opinions — read criticism, deep, all encompassing criticism.

Some obvious stuff is the foreigness of all the major characters. The Japanese couple thinks everything is cool. The Italian woman is kind of confused, and the English is close to out of his mind.

The other characters are all tired and broken down generally, and in turn, humoring, using and hurting the foreigners. Metaphors for the state of Americana today? The rambling could last forever.

At heart though, this is a very enjoyable movie, a strange ode to all that was great about America, which is about all that's left in this film: some broken down memories, disjointed characters only vaguely connecting, and the glamour that once was, now embodied in silk screen posters of Elvis above beds in a little hotel in Memphis.

Great stuff.

Mystery Train is being shown through till this Thursday only at the Academy of Music, for its only local showing.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES(March 21-April 19): Seek the advice of someone with more experience if thinking about starting a new enterprise. Business trips are best postponed. Domestic complications could slow you down. Spend the evening at home.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20): Exciting people or events could distract you. You will gain nothing from bickering with higher-ups. Postpone social engagements. Romance is fulfilling. Enroll in night school.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20): Originality is a terrific asset now. Follow some seemingly offbeat advice regarding your career or finances. Do your best to meet your obligations. Romance has its ups and downs.

CANCER(June 21-July 22): Someone is more interested in what you are thinking than what you are saying! Utilize your writing or public relations skills to promote a pet project. Avoid neglecting your loved ones.

LEO(July 23-Aug. 22): Stick with people who are reliable. A casual approach works wonders when discussing a touchy personal matter. Do not give up too easily in romance. A loving attitude helps heal emotional wounds.

VIRGO(Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Place greater emphasis on guarding against careless mistakes but do not exaggerate a disagreement. Save funds for travel. Good news regarding temporary employment pleases someone who is college bound.

LIBRA(Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A great day for family and community affairs. A domestic exchange or transportation venture could be involved. Complete routine chores before starting a new project. At-home recreation is favored tonight.

SCORPIO(Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Some of your long-held opinions could be wrong. The attraction you feel toward a certain member of the opposite sex could suddenly fade. Turn your attention to someone more worthy of your love.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A letter or long-distance message sends your spirit soaring. spend more time with an older person unable to handle his personal affairs. A work problem requires careful deliberation, not panic.

CAPRICORN(Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Humanitarian efforts will boost your standing in the community. Avoid speaking in a headstrong fashion. Changing your diet will give you new energy. Complete work assignments on time.

AQUARIUS(Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Versatility should be emphasized if you are making changes. Speaking in front of groups helps restore your self-confidence. Take calculated financial risks. Romance looks blissful!

PISCES(Feb. 19-March 20): Trust your instincts. An excitable friend or foe must be handled with kid gloves this morning. Bow to an authority figure's whim to avoid a head-on collision. Time will show who is right.

Yugoslavian republic holds first free election

Republic of Slovania will have final voting decision in two weeks; Kucan is leading LJUBLJANA, Yugoslavia (AP) – The liberal republic of Slovenia held Yugoslavia's first free multiparty elections since 1945 and the presidential candidate who favored a cautious approach to secession won the most votes.

But former Communist Milan Kucan did not gain an absolute majority in Sunday's balloting and faces an April 22 runoff vote with Joze Pucnik, a former political prisoner of the DEMOS opposition coalition, returns showed yesterday.

Political analysts predicted a neck-and-neck race between Pucnik, who advocates quick Slovenian independence from Yugoslavia, and Kucan, who had called for a more cautious political approach.

About 75 percent of eligible voters cast ballots, choosing among 17 parties for a new Slovenian Parliament and among four candidates for president.

With 90 percent of ballots counted, Kucan led with 44.5 percent of the vote to 26.1 percent for Pucnik. Independent candidate Ivan Kramberger won 18.8 percent and Liberal Party candidate Marko Demsar took 10.5 percent.

The first-round results "suggest that Slovenians have opted for a peaceful transition from a single-party monopoly to a parliamentary democracy," said Kucan, an engineer of the republic's move toward democracy.

Pucnik, who spent seven years in Slovenian prisons in the 1950s for his opposition to communism said he would win the runoff "because those who voted for Kramberger and Demsar will now probably vote for me."

Early returns from Sunday's balloting indicated the Slovenian Communists, who recently renamed themselves the Party of Democratic Renewal, would be the largest single party in the republic's Parliament but would face a tough DEMOS coalition of five conservative parties.

The former Communists, who have also broken with the national Communist Party leadership because it has resisted democratic reform, won about 21 percent of the vote in balloting for the republic's 240-seat Parliament, with the five DEMOS parties getting about 35 percent, returns showed.

Official results of parliamentary voting were not expected until Tuesday due to a slow and complicated counting process.

Yugoslavia's president Janez Drnovsek, a Slovene, said after voting in Ljubljana that he hoped the whole country would hold its first free elections for federal parliament by year's end.

Elections in Slovenia, the richest and most liberal of the six Yugoslav republics, "represent a sign of the democracy drive that cannot be stopped in Yugoslavia," Drnovsek said.

Capt. of Scandinavian Star abandoned ship prematurely

LYSEKIL, Sweden (AP) – The captain of a ferry that became a fiery deathtrap during a North Sea voyage denied improper behavior yesterday as reports surfaced he and his officers abandoned ship as rescue efforts got under way.

Police estimated about 150 people were killed in the suspicious blaze, which broke out on the 20-year-old Scandinavia Star before dawn Saturday as it headed to Denmark from Norway.

District police chief Roar Onso said a commission of officials from Sweden, Norway and Denmark would investigate the disaster, parallel to the police investigation focusing on suspicions of arson.

"We are working on the assumption that the fire was arranged," said Norwegian criminal police chief Magnar Auskrust in Oslo. "In that case, it is a real disaster, caused by one or several persons."

Captain Hugo Larsen was on the bridge of the 10,500-ton ferry as the smoldering ship was towed into harbor at dusk on Saturday. Fire officials said he left the ship before all survivors were evacuated, and returned later.

"I never failed the passengers," Larsen was quoted as saying by Sweden's national TT news agency. "It was only when the flames were around the bridge and we didn't have a chance to go down to look for more passengers on the deck that I gave the order to leave the ship."

Fire inspector Ingvar Brynfors, who was among the first rescuers to reach the ship, said four people, two passengers and two Portuguese crewmen, were found alive on the ship after the captain left.

Larsen had moved to the Stena Saga, another ferry that picked up survivors and helped coordinate rescue efforts, Brynfors told reporters.

Larsen, speaking on Swedish radio, also denied that the alarm failed to go off. "That is not correct, because the fire alarm sounded all over the boat. (We) hit it three times in a row, started all fire pumps and at the same time the radio operator was awakened and sent the Mayday signal."

Police listed 345 survivors, but it was uncertain how many people had been aboard when the fire broke out. The captain said 395 passengers and 97 crewmen were on board, leaving 147 people dead or missing and presumed dead. But that figure did not include children under age 7, Onso said.

An accurate count of the victims was expected to take several days.

Passengers complained that the crewmen, mostly Filipinos and Portuguese sailors, were untrained for emergencies and could not communicate with them.

Rick Qualls, an American member of a song-and-dance troupe that worked on the ship, said the alarm was sounded 15 minutes after the vessel caught fire and filled with smoke.

In a week aboard the ship, he said, he had never undergone a fire drill, though he praised the crew for trying to save lives.

One member of the seven-person troupe, Ruth E. Rome, was among the missing, Qualls said from his hotel room in Oslo.

Also missing were a British builder living in Oslo, Jeffrey Duncombe, and his three young children, who were visiting from England.

Firefighter Bjorn Ralbring told the Dagens Nyheter newspaper that he was given to understand that everyone was safely evacuated by the time he arrived — 3½ hours after the distress signal was sent.

He was surprised to stumble over bodies.

"I thought the three people I saw in the corridor were just some poor people with bad luck. But that was just the beginning," he said. "Behind every cabin door there were more dead people."

Sox pounce Tigers in home opener

By DAVE O'HARA
AP Sports Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Baseball came a week late, but everything stayed the same at Fenway Park: Wade Boggs got three hits, Roger Clemens won and the Detroit Tigers lost.

Opening day, delayed for only the second time in history, was even pushed back an extra 18 minutes because of festivities. When they finally played the first game of the season, the Boston Red Sox beat Detroit 5-2.

Clemens held the Tigers hitless until Tony Phillips singled to start the sixth inning, and allowed three hits, struck out five and walked two. He retired the first two batters of the seventh inning and then left the game after throwing 101 pitches.

"With all the opening day excitement, I got fired up the same as everyone else," Clemens said. "I threw the ball pretty well, but I overthrew a little at times."

Boggs got the first hit of the season and finished 3-for-4 with a walk. His leadoff single in the first inning helped set up Dwight Evans' three-run double off Jack Morris, and Boggs singled home a run in the second.

Boggs, 7-for-33 in past season openers, reached the career 1,600-hit mark.

"I would like to have gotten 1,600 in my eighth season, but one game into the ninth season isn't bad," Boggs said.

The Red Sox won their opener for the first time in five years as Detroit, which led the majors with 103 losses last season, lost again. Both teams made two errors, continuing baseball's pattern of sloppy play this spring.

Rob Murphy pitched two innings and Lee Smith relieved with two out and two on in the ninth. Phillips got an infield hit that loaded the bases, but Trammell, who homered off Smith to win the 1988 opener at Fenway, struck out to end the game.

Morris, who pitched a total of seven innings in the lockout-abbreviated spring training, gave up five runs on seven hits in 6 2/3 innings. He struck out three and walked three in his 11th consecutive opening day start.

Boggs, a five-time batting champion, reached the 1,600-hit mark at the start of his ninth season. Boggs and Marty Barrett led off the first with singles and with one out, Ellis Burks was saved when first baseman Cecil Fielder dropped a foul popup for an error. After Burks walked, Evans doubled over center fielder Lloyd Moseby to the 420-foot mark.

"I've been playing this game long enough where I can say I know what I am doing at the plate," Evans said. "At that time, I was just trying to get the ball in the air to get a run in. I was pleased with the result."

Kevin Romine doubled in the second and scored on Boggs' single. Morris allowed just one more hit until Boggs opened the seventh with a double, and Chet Lemon's error on Burks' fly ball allowed Boggs to score.

Phillips began the sixth by grounding a 1-2 pitch through the middle for Detroit's first hit. Trammell double, Lou Whitaker had a sacrifice fly and Moseby hit an RBI single with two outs.

After a month-long lockout delayed openers by a week, the start of the season was pushed back by 18 minutes because of pregame festivities. Toni Giamatti, widow of former commissioner Bart Giamatti, threw out the ceremonial first ball.

In 1972, the start of the major league season was delayed for the first time because of a 13-day players' strike.

Gazelles face BC Eagles in home opener

Murphy, King lead UMass lax team in goals and assists

By ADRIENNE MATT
Collegian Staff

Their record may be bleak but the University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team remains very optimistic.

Despite the Gazelles' 1-5 record, this young team still has energy to burn as they eagerly face Boston College today at 3:30 p.m. on Totman Field.

The recent losses to Yale (12-6) and James Madison University (9-7) can be attributed in part to lack of experience, said head coach Patti Bossio.

Bossio has been with the women's lax program for five years. She was an assistant for two years, prior to being head coach.

"We need a lot of communication on defense," said Bossio. "We weren't able to do it against James Madison when we were one-on-one around the crease.

"We had some crucial turnovers due to inaccurate passing, missed feed position shots and charge calls," Bossio said.

The quality of play has increased since spring break, Bossio said. With fewer turnovers, the rest of the schedule looks promising.

Senior co-captain Sue Murphy is currently the leading scorer with 13 goals and one assist. Last season she had 27 goals and 18 assists, with 40 goals and 24 assists the year before. She was named All-New England and All-American her sophomore year. Murphy has been the Gazelles' leading scorer since her freshman year.

"Her placement is excellent and she's got a strong shot," said teammate Michelle Pytko. "She's a very deceptive attack.

"In addition to being an awesome player, she's a great leader," Pytko said. "She leads by example."

Following Murphy in points are senior co-captain Ann King with nine goals, sophomore Delores Angulo and freshman Rachael Splaine with four goals each.

"The team that controls the drive will win this game," Bossio said of today's match. "The team that comes out the hungriest for it will take it."

Against James Madison Angulo controlled most of the draws. She will be taking the draws for the Gazelles against Boston College today.

"In order to stay in the game, we need to keep the opponents under 10 goals," said Bossio. "Defense will be a big factor. They'll need to come out more."

Key defense players include freshman Marina Krobisch, sophomore Andrea Goldman, junior Liz Hoyt and sophomore Cindy Dolce.

Former softball player, junior Karen Pierce, has started all Gazelle games in goal. This year marks Pierce's first collegiate lax season. She holds just below a 50 percent saves average.

Due to lousy weather, the women's lax team has had to reschedule some matches. The Gazelles will face Brown University Wednesday at 3:30 p.m. and New Hampshire Saturday at 1 p.m. Both games will be at Totman Field.

Men's tennis team slices URI singles, 5-1

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's tennis team won their season opener yesterday afternoon, defeating their Atlantic 10 Conference rivals from the University of Rhode Island. The Minutemen travelled to Kingston, RI, and came home with a 5-1 victory.

The Minutemen, who have defeated the Rams every time the two teams have met for the past four years, are now now 1-0. Rhode Island drops its record to 0-2.

"This is our swan song," said coach Manny Roberts. "This is our last spring season." The Minutemen were ECAC Champions in the fall, with an 8-1 record.

The Minutemen picked up right where they left off in the fall, continuing their inspiring play, as they dropped only two sets in the entire match. Barry Wadsworth, Paul Audet and Jeff Hechemy won easily, each swept their opponents in two set victories.

Wadsworth finished off his opponent quickly with a 6-1, 6-2 win. Audet rolled right along following in Wadsworth's footsteps, winning 6-2, 6-1. Hechemy had momentum on his side as he swept 6-2, 6-2 to give the Minutemen a 3-0 lead.

UMass junior Rich Stone battled through his first set, then dominated the second, winning 7-5, 6-0. Senior David Rivera allowed only one set to the Rams' senior Allen Clarke. Rivera cruised through the first set with an easy 6-3 victory. The table was turned, however, as Clarke charged back to take the second set 6-3. Rivera hung tough and took the third and deciding set with a 6-2 score.

When the singles matches are swept, the prerogative of the coaches determines whether or not the doubles are played. The Minutemen loaded up and headed home after the singles.

Despite the fact that the budget cuts have hurt their program, the Minutemen are not throwing their season away. There will not be a program at all next spring, which for some would be reason enough to give up, but for this team it is business as usual. They're fighting to be successful in a no-win situation.

The Minutemen return home for a match Thursday afternoon against the University of Hartford at Upper Boyden Courts. Starting time is at 3 p.m.

The Minutemen will go on a two game road trip following the Hartford match as they head to Providence College on April 17 and then travel to Medford to battle the Tufts Jumbos on April 23.

Two days later, April 25, the Minutemen will compete in their final home meet. The Connecticut Huskies will come into Amherst for a 3 p.m. meet at the Upper Boyden courts.

The spring program will conclude with the New England's. This year's tournament will take place on the campus of Central Connecticut State University

UM Baseball goes to bat against dwarfed UConn

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's baseball team takes the field against the same University of Connecticut team which beat them 16-0 on March 27 at Earl Lorden Field.

Or will they face the same team today at 3 p.m. in Storrs? The Huskies have lost five of seven games since then, and a hitting slump has been the main reason. On Sunday, Connecticut lost a double-header to Villanova 5-1, 4-1, scoring just two runs in the twinbill.

"I thought [UConn] had good hitting," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "They have the kind of guys who can swing the bat well."

The main swingers for UConn (10-9-1) have been sophomore left fielder Sal Tinnerello, who's hitting .446 with 15 runs batted in, and senior third baseman Ken Coffey (.406, 13 RBIs).

Senior catcher Mark Drabinski of Chicopee has chipped in with his bat, hitting .333 with 11 RBIs. The Huskies are hitting .284 as a team.

Dan O'Leary will take his 1-0 record and 3.24 earned run average to the mound this afternoon. Connecticut played Villanova yesterday afternoon and hasn't yet decided on a starter for today's game.

The Minutemen are coming off of a draining double-header on Saturday against Dartmouth. UMass lost the opener 11-10 in eight innings, while taking the second game 5-4.

"We coasted at times in the first game — I thought we should have won both games," Stone said. "We have a young team, and that's been the main reason for our inconsistency this season.

"I'd like to be in a better situation record-wise (9-8 overall) — which I feel we could be," said Stone.

Pitching coach Bob Rikeman praised the young team's attitude, pointing out that seven of the 11 members of his pitching staff are freshman.

"The competition is definitely tough," Rikeman said. "For a high school kid to come up and play Division I baseball is definitely a big jump.

"The attitude (of the team) is great — it's the best attitude I've seen in a while," said Rikeman.

Two days off since the double-header against Dartmouth will definitely help the team, particularly relief ace Jerry Creamer. Creamer pitched in both games Saturday, taking the loss in the first game.

"[Creamer's] got a rubber arm and the mentality to come back," Rikeman said. "He can pitch in every game if we need him to."

"[UConn] is always solid — they've got good hitting and pitching," Rikeman said. "That's what it takes to win."

UConn certainly had what it took on March 27. Which UConn team will show up to play today?

Navratilova takes cup, Capriati takes back seat

Pro wins 150th match at championship

By RICK SCOPE
AP Sports

Hilton Head Island, SC (AP)- Martina Navratilova may be 33, but she can still play with the best of the youngsters who are the future of her sport.

Navratilova proved that again on Sunday by beating 14-year-old Jennifer Capriati 6-2,6-4 to capture the Family Circle Magazine Cup Championship before a capacity crowd of 5,500.

"I was really nervous before the match. I was excited because here I am at 33 and I'm still competing with these kids," Navratilova said. "I'm just grateful I can still run with the best of them."

The victory was Navratilova's 150th in a career that began before Capriati was born.

Capriati was playing in only her third tournament since turning pro last month. She made the finals of her very first tournament, losing to third-ranked Gabriela Sabatini.

"It was the greatest feeling of my life," said Capriati, who was 2 years old when Navratilova won her first Grand Slam title in 1978. "Here I was playing a legend."

Navratilova smiled at that, but she knows Capriati is a future star.

"I think I played a legend in the making," Navratilova said. "I think Jennifer's got the future in her hands. It's going to be fun watching her grow and be a champion, cause I'm sure she will be."

Asked if she had ever seen any player as good as Capriati is at her age, Navratilova said, "Oh, no. No. I hope I won't again."

Navratilova had seen Capriati play but did not know what to expect from the Wesley Chapel, Fla., eighth-grader.

"It was a learning experience for me as well as her," Navratilova said. "It was nerve-wracking. I had everything to lose, yet I had nothing to lose."

Capriati is 13-3 as a pro and 3-2 against players in the top 10 after losing to second-ranked Navratilova.

Penn State stays in A-10 conference

The Atlantic 10 Conference has announced that Penn State University will remain a member of the conference through June 30, 1991.

Penn State announced in January that it would be leaving the A-10 within two years to join the Big 10 Conference. It was rumored at the time that conference officials would be voting the Nittany Lions out effective at the end of this season.

WEATHER

It will be breezy today with showers ending, high temperatures will reach 50-55.

Duffey to augment stock monitoring

Vows to increase access to stock portfolio

Chancellor Duffey said he will increase public access to University of Massachusetts stock holdings and increase the monitoring of new purchases in his response yesterday to student demands following recently discovered violations of the UMass policy to divest from South Africa.

Duffey, who also serves as UMass president, said an updated copy of the University's stock portfolio will be placed in the Reserved Reading Room of the Main Library each month.

Treasurer Robert H. Brand's office will also instruct the University's three money management firms to notify Brand via facsimile machine after each new stock purchase, Duffey said.

The treasurer's office currently uses the Investors Responsibility Research Center list of companies that do business in South Africa to avoid buying stock in those companies, Duffey said. The office checks the list at the end of each month when it reviews the stock purchases and will continue this practice as a safeguard precaution, he said.

Eyad Kishawi, a senior engineering major who yesterday organized a rally against investments with South Africa, called Duffey's new policies "a slight move of good faith."

However, Duffey turned down the students' remaining demands, issued last week.

A "a massive escalation of force" is scheduled to take place if the administration does not respond to the remaining demands by Friday, Kishawi said.

The demands include the resignation of Treasurer Brand and the revision of the University's divestment policy to include the Africa Fund Unified list in addition to the IRRC list.

They also called for divestment from all governments connected to South Africa, and a campus-wide boycott of Coca-Cola.

Duffey said Brand will not resign and said he will not add the Unified list because the IRRC "seems to be a complete list."

"The [Unified] list only comes out once a year and the situation is changing too rapidly for that," he said. The IRRC is updated each month.

He said the violations occurred because a UMass employee did not properly consult the IRRC list. The students maintain that the Unified list is more extensive than the IRRC list and therefore would be more efficient.

In regard to the latter demands, Duffey said the UMass policy does not include cutting off investments with governments who have ties to South Africa.

BOG, SGA agree on fund allocation

Board of Governors to receive $5 per student from activity fee

By JULIE LIVINGSTONE
Collegian Staff

The Board of Governors and Student Government Association reached an agreement Monday regarding a proposed cut in funding to the BOG.

The agreement is to allocate $5 per undergraduate student to the Board, with the Board remaining responsible for the Craft Shop located in the Campus Center, and the Art Gallery located in the Student Union.

Garron J. Carvalho, BOG treasurer said, "It should have been that way all along, but it's a good beginning."

This agreement arrives after several months of heated debate surrounding a proposal to cut the allocation from $7 to $2 per fee-paying student. This fee goes directly into the Student Activities Trust Fund.

A recommendation to cut monies allocated to the area governments and the BOG for fiscal year 1991 was submitted to the undergraduate student senate in February for consideration. As a result of these cuts, more money would be made available to the Registered Student Organizations.

The agreement will be presented on the senate floor tonight, as well as the motion for cuts to the area governments.

SGA Treasurer Karen Talbot said, "RSOs will see a substantial increase in their money if the two motions proposed for area governments and BOG are passed tonight."

Funding for the BOG originates in the SATF, which is funneled through the SGA. The rest of that funding is derived from the Graduate Student Senate, and the Stockbridge School of Agriculture.

SGA Speaker Dan Chesnicka said it was decided that the Board and SGA have to work together, and open the lines of communication. "Our goal was not to destroy the autonomy of the Board, but it was necessary for everyone to tighten their belts," Chesnicka said.

Student remembered by friends

RIC OLIVEIRA
Collegian Correspondent

At 5:30 Monday afternoon Rich Koster knocked on his next door neighbor's door and asked for a rope.

At 5:40 p.m. his roommate and high school buddy, found him hanging lifelessly in their room at 1603 Coolidge Residence Hall. He was pronounced dead at 6:25 p.m. at Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton.

No one who knew him, his friends, his roommate or his family, saw it coming. He is remembered in part as a practical joker, always trying to bring laughter out of even the most dull situations.

His good friends describe him as a music lover. For many hours he would sit with his roommate playing guitar, singing out for all his floor to hear.

On Monday, April 9, there was no more music being heard. His friends feel that Koster, a University of Massachusetts sophomore, was crying from inside. "He was the last person that I would ever think would do it," said Karen Hershon, a friend.

Brian Phillips, Koster's floormate and close friend said: "He was always trying to make everyone else happy, so everyone just felt he was happy too."

According to friends, the last practical joke Koster performed was a fake hand-held computer game which would squirt you with water when you attempted to play. He ran from room to room with this game, bringing smiles and moisture to everyone's faces.

Along with his love for practical jokes and music, his friends say Rich loved peace. Hanging outside his door was the song "Imagine" by John Lennon. Koster put it there just a few days before his death. Friends said someone tore it down last night.

His friends say the hardest thing to deal with is, why, at 20 years old, Koster would choose to die rather than fight on.

"He hurt more people than he would ever know," said Sheryl Honikman. "It just wasn't an answer. It wasn't," said Chris Grove, a floormate.

Of all of the ironies surrounding his death, his friends say the hardest is that Koster chose to move to 1603 Coolidge because of all of the good times he had there the year before. His room is the only room on the floor where there is a pipe from which such a fate is possible. "By trying to solve his problems, Rich Koster only added more problems to the people he only wanted to make laugh," said Mark L., a Coolidge resident.

Speaker urges reproductive rights activism

AMY HENRY
Collegian Staff

Faye Wattleton, president of the Planned Parenthood Federation of America urged more than 200 students to get involved in politics and fight to perserve reproductive freedom, last night in the University of Massachusetts Student Union Ballroom.

Supporters of the rally stood outside with signs that read "Free abortion on demand," and "Stop the war against women."

The lecture titled, "Reproductive Rights and Women's Health Care," addressed issues from the access of poor and young women to abortions to the reproductive rights of women internationally.

"I think that it is disgraceful that the Webster decision came down in 1989 the same year that the Berlin wall came down," she said. "The wall between church and state also came down."

Gay couples joined in 'Commitment Services'

By CHRIS MUTHER
Collegian Staff

Marriage does not only mean living as man and wife anymore, it also means living as man and man or woman and woman, according to Victoria Saford, a minister at the Unitarian Universalist Church in Northampton.

According to Saford, in the 15 weddings she has performed since August, six have been 'commitment services' or 'services of holy union.' She said this summer she expects the number of homosexual and heterosexual marriages to be even.

"Gay couples need to feel the same validation of their commitment that straight couples do and want to get married the same way straight couples do," she said.

All people who want to get married in the church go through the same counseling and Saford said she asks homosexual couples the same questions she asks heterosexual couples to get a sense of their relationship.

"I stress to the same sex couples that they are facing additional challenges from society, they are striking new ground and should be sure what they are doing," she said.

Although the marriage is validated by the church, she said it is still not regarded as a legal marriage by the state, especially in matters of insurance and child custody.

Most couples are aware of these legal matters, but Saford said their family and friends often do not understand and need to have these matters explained to them carefully.

"At commitment services I'll often say a few words to family and friends about what a special event they are witnessing and the special circumstances surrounding it," she said.

The popularity of homosexual weddings has not been nationwide but they have been popular in the Northampton/Amherst area because of a large gay, lesbian population and a more liberal attitude, she said.

Another religious organization that performs 'same sex commitment services' is the Mt. Toby Monthly Meeting of Friends, a Quaker organization in Leveret.

According to spokeswoman Janet Hoffman, Quakers in the United States have had over 15 commitment services since 1981, the first New England service was held last August in Putney, Vermont.

She said not all Quakers agree on the issue of same sex marriage, but the group in Leveret approved it last spring. They have yet to perform a ceremony.

The Quaker same sex commitment services are not recognized as legal by the state, but Hoffman said the aim of the services is to provide a 'spiritual unity' and not a legal one.

She said the Quakers do not discriminate against homosexuality and they regard homosexual marriages in the same way they look at heterosexual marriages.

Other religious groups contacted in the area, those of the Catholic, Jewish and Muslim faiths, say they do not perform same sex service commitments.

New program offers volunteers local placement

By MARC RITCHIE
Collegian Staff

Volunteer service and cultural diversity are the goals of a new student-run organization which will be part of the Michele Cocuzzo Human Kindness Project, said the program's coordinator.

Britt Alfchuler, who is coordinating the new Human Kindness Outreach Program, said there will be a resource office on campus to match interested students with volunteer opportunities.

The new placement office will be staffed by students from the Human Kindness Project who have experience volunteering. The office will teach students about volunteering and find positions for them in the local community.

"True human nature is noble and volunteering helps people to express that nobility," Alfchuler said.

The Michele Cocuzzo Human Kindness Project was formed two years ago with the goal of fostering human kindness. The project was named in honor of Michele Cocuzzo, a UMass student known for her compassion and caring, who died of cancer in 1987.

Students who participate in the current program live together in Lewis Residence Hall and take a class which explores kindness in relationships. Last semester, 22 students of diverse cultural heritage participated in the "living/learning community." Spaces will be increased to 25 this fall.

As part of the class, each student studies a type of volunteer service and spends time as a volunteer at the Not Bread Alone soup kitchen.

Paul Vasconcellos, the Residence Director responsible for the project, feels the program helps students gain "awareness of social justice and teaches them how to work towards change." Alfchuler is currently supervising a small volunteer placement service for the School of Management that matches students with volunteer opportunities such as the Big Brother/Big Sister program, the Northampton Board of Public Health, the Northampton Veterans' Hospital and homeless shelters.

The School of Management program has acted as a pilot project. The new organization will function on a much larger scale, she said.

There are "hundreds of positions available" for students who want to volunteer and experience is not necessary, Alfchuler said.

A planning meeting for the volunteer placement service will be held April 12, at 8:30 p.m. in the main lounge of Lewis residence Hall and is open to all students.

Toddlers build mural out of trash

Teacher uses garbage to educate about environment

By LAVINIA GAMMON
Collegian Correspondent

Trash can be educational, according to Trudy Alicea, a student teacher at the Human Development Lab School at the University of Massachusetts who organized 22 three- and four-year-olds to build a mural out of trash for Earth Day.

"We created this mural to help educate children about the environment," said Alicea.

In conjunction with Arbor Day, the toddler class had been planting seeds and learning about how things grow.

Alicea said she decided to make the mural because she thought it would be a fun way to teach the children about the trash in this world and how it affects growing things and the environment.

"I wanted to show the kids that being aware of the garbage we make is an extension of taking care of the environment," she said.

Alicea wrote to the children's parents telling them about the mural and asking them to bring in old food wrappers, packages, and other household garbage such as papers, cans, and plastic containers.

"Our hope was to get the parents involved too, because they're the ones making the garbage," she said.

On Wednesday of last week the children brought in the trash from their homes and on Friday they went out and collected garbage that was left around campus. Friday afternoon they put all the trash together and made the mural. Each student glued a piece of garbage onto it and wrote their name under it.

"We wanted everything to be made from garbage so we even taped paper bags together to make the paper the mural is on," she said.

As they worked, Alicea told the children about different types of garbage, such as plastic, and explained to them which pieces were harmful to the environment and why. She said she was not sure if the children understood everything she said, "but they definitely learned something about what trash does to our world."

Alicea said the mural has been a great success. Both the children and their parents have learned more about the environment and how to help improve it. Through these exercises, Alicea said she hopes to have instilled in the children a good set of values towards the environment.

"Respect for our environment needs to start with kids now," she said, adding "We hope a little of this [respect] will catch on with the kids and trickle down to the parents."

April 22 is the 20th annual Earth Day. There will be celebrations, rallies, and environmental awareness discussions held all over the country. Alicea said she hopes to put the school's trash mural on display for Earth Day so that everyone will be able to see the kind of garbage that is left around and "the importance of caring about the environment and teaching our kids to care about it too."

Physics major wins $1,500 prize

Ronald Gordon, a physics major, claimed the top prize of $1,500 from United Technologies at the fifth annual Mathematics Competition at the University of Massachusetts, contest organizers announced yesterday.

A second place prize of $800 from Electronic Data Systems went to Carol Livermore, Justin Armstrong and Gary Gengo tied for third place, splitting the $300 prize from the UMass math department.

Four honorable mentions were awarded with a prize of $25 each from the math department. They are: Ken Burmer, psychology major, Shing Guan, a COINS major, A.C. Ho, an electrical engineering major, and Todd Short.

The winners are determined by their performance on a two-hour test, which involves 10 questions on algebra and calculus, said Henry Jacob, math professor emeritus at the University.

He said 93 students took the test last Thursday. "I think the top performers did very well this year," Jacob said.

■ Speaker advocates reproductive rights

Wattleton said that poor and young women are especially threatened by the recent Webster decision because they cannot afford to go to another state to have an abortion.

"We should protect the rights for the minority as well as the majority," she said.

The issue of abortion is not just a gender issue, she said urging the men in the audience to get involved as well. "Without our rights, you do not have rights."

Wattleton said there is a correlation between the tyranny that Nicolae Ceausescu, ex-leader of Romania, imposed when he made abortions illegal in 1966, and the reproductive restrictions being imposed on women today. At first, birthrates soared, but over a ten year span, they decreased as many women died from illegal abortions, she said.

Wattleson said AT&T, which has funded Planned Parenthood for 25 years, recently withdrew its financial support for prevention of teenage pregnancy. AT&T gave into "anti-choice extremists" after being criticized for funding an organization which provides abortions, she said.

"They never funded any abortions," she said. "They helped to overt abortions by teaching teenagers to avoid unintended pregnancies."

"That's never been a part of our policy," he said. If it were, he said, UMass "couldn't buy U.S. bonds."

He said government bonds from Israel, which has ties to South Africa, are not in violation of the policy. But he did not rule out the possibility that they may be sold when they mature.

Kishawi said he and other students are protesting UMass ties to the Eaton Corporation and the Allegheny Ludlum Corporation, two companies whose holdings in South Africa "could be questioned," according to the treasurer's office. Both companies still maintain dormant subsidiaries with South Africa.

On Thursday, Duffey instructed Brand to sell all stocks and bonds in the UMass portfolio that appear on the IRRC list.

However, Duffey said yesterday that UMass stock holdings in Sears & Roebuck, Morgan Stanley Group, Delta Airlines and First Chicago have been sold "as a result of student protest" although they "appear clean according to the IRRC."

"The University over-responded in this case," by selling off its stock before confirming the violations, Duffey said.

UMass spokeswoman Karin Sherbin said the University "broke even" after selling its stocks.

Staff member Maria Sacchetti contributed to this story.

National anthem out of tune

"On September 14, 1814, Maryland lawyer Francis Scott Key watched British ships bombard Baltimore's Fort McHenry. That night, he wrote the lyrics to the future national anthem, 'The Star Spangled Banner.'

"175 years later, Janet Jackson released Rhythm Nation 1814, a new anthem for a 'a nation with no geographic boundaries,' with a better beat than Key's tune. Jackson may want us to reconsider our national prejudices, she may hope that her record gets played before ballgames, or she may even be referring to a different event, one ignored by history books.

"Even if you get the hint," she says. "There's still the story behind it, and there will come a time when I'll tell."

— Spin magazine (March 1990) on the mystery behind Ms. Jackson's obsession with the year 1814.

Darren Garnick

The United States of America cannot wait for Janet "Don't Call Me Baby" Jackson. Francis Scott Key's little militaristic ditty is outdated and needs to be replaced NOW.

Our nation is in dire need of a new national anthem. Something with a little more spunk than "Escapade," a tired sentimental tribute to an America that never was.

As we enter a new millennium, I believe that "Proud Mary" by John Fogerty should be sung in every schoolhouse across the land. The words are sheer genius, capturing the American spirit of charity, adventurism and appreciation for nature.

Space limitations and copyright laws forbid me to reprint the entire lyrics here, but please feel free to try a sampler:

If you come down to the river
Bet ya gonna find some people who live
You don't have to worry
'Cause you have no money
People on the river are happy to give . . .
(CHORUS) Big Wheel keep on turning
Proud Mary keep on burning
Rolling . . . Rolling . . . Rolling . . .
Rolling on a river . . .

Granted, the struggle to get "Proud Mary" adopted as our national anthem will be a long and arduous one. My political consultants tell me Congress will legalize drugs first.

My best bet is to get a Proud Mary Bill passed by all 50 state legislatures — then smother the pressure on President Bush. I have already contacted State Rep. Stanley Rosenberg (D-Amherst). So far, he has been non-committal to my efforts.

Stan — he said I could call him Stan — refused to endorse pro-Proud Mary legislation, claiming most government officials "would not entertain" such a notion. He did, however, say that the "Star Spangled Banner" was "unsingable."

Citing the song's wide range of octaves, Rosenberg said people get easily frustrated with the tune and are less likely to pay attention to the meaning of the words.

Asked to suggest a replacement, he said: "I honestly haven't thought about it. There ought to be some national debate about what the song should be."

Stan, I believe if you stop dilly-dallying around with such boring issues as the environment and higher education, you could be at the forefront of this national debate.

It has been a long struggle, Stan. I am tired now and am passing the torch on to you. Help us, Stan Rosenberg, you're our only hope.

A tribute to life

On March 11, one of my students died elevator surfing.

Joel Mangion was a special guy with a "goofy" smile that brightened many people's lives. He went out of his way to help others — staying up late to help others with their computer, taking time out to care for sick friends.

Joel was known for his never-failing sense of humor. He had a special zest for life and a chronic sense of adventure. He had spirit and energy and an ability to make others feel good.

Julie McCrea

For some, this was a first experience with death and mortality and it seemed unduly harsh that it should have been one so young and healthy. Others had had several other friends die in tragic accidents and felt a real sense of disillusionment with life.

We all felt personal pain and sorrow. Some of us shared our tears while others cried privately. Some felt personal guilt as if somehow responsible for Joel's death. Others felt the need to express anger — at Joel and at life.

Aside from their own grief, students expressed concern for the roommate who had been best friends with Joel for several years. They also recognized that their grief must be minimal compared to what his family was experiencing.

The mood in the building became decidedly somber; the elevators a silent reminder of the accident. Flowers and cards were sent and arrangements made for transportation to Newton for friends to be with the family for visiting hours at the chapel.

The week became more painful, however, as friends experienced the insensitivity of others in classes and elsewhere on campus.

People were talking about the incident and, without thinking that they might be next to a friend or floormate, often made judgments about Joel or talked as if he had somehow deserved to die for being so "stupid" as to ride on top of the elevators.

I observed a delivery person who, upon hearing of the student death while in the lobby, seemed to think there was some humor in it. The press was intrusive and reporters seemed manipulative in their questioning — then betraying as they printed inaccurate "facts" and took personal quotes out of context.

The floor pulled together again to deal with these after-effects. No one would disagree that riding on top of the elevators is stupid behavior. But we must also examine our own risk-taking behaviors.

Many of us have taken much greater risks. Most students have at some time gotten in a car with a drunk driver or driven themselves while under the influence of alcohol or other drugs.

If any message is to be gained through the death of Joel, perhaps it is what his father told his friends in Newton: "If some is good, more is not better. If four beers are good, 14 are not better. If tears are good, depression is not better."

We must enjoy life but also know when to set limits.

Today has been set aside as a day of remembrance for Joel. Kennedy residents will be wearing blue ribbons (because blue was his favorite color) and his close friends will have carnations. Joel's family will be on hand this evening to join his friends for a special gathering.

As friends and floormates continue to work through the loss of Joel, I encourage you to ponder the value of life and the significance of friends and family today.

Live each day with the sense of adventure that Joel displayed, learn to emulate his selflessness and take time to show others how you cherish your special relationships.

Let this be your tribute.

Julie McCrea is Residence Director of the Kennedy building

Play the political game in Boston

Basically, the budget stinks.

You're paying more for your education, but getting longer lines for registration, fewer and bigger classes to choose from, cuts in services, and some of you may have to spend an extra semester or year before you can fill all of your requirements.

Although you are paying more, faculty, staff and maintenance folks are getting less. We are told that there's no money for any pay raise for the next three years.

We know from polls that the folks of the Commonwealth like the University and public higher education. They say they are willing to pay the taxes necessary to keep them rolling along.

We have to attract attention to remind our friends in the Commonwealth that we still need their support, to lean on the legislature. And we need to remind the legislature that we have the political will to fight for what we know is right.

The politicians need to know that we will not go away. And, that we vote. November is not so far away. If we go to Boston and make our voices heard, then we are players in their game.

If we don't go, it will be business as usual in the Statehouse. They'll do what is easy for them instead of what is right.

Our demonstration in Boston will help nudge them in the right direction. Buses leave at 9 a.m. on Thursday from Haigis Mall.

Ignorance costs more than education.

Donating pints of blood proves precious to recipients

I don't give blood.

I am one of those people who slink by the donor centers, mumbling inane excuses about being too busy to donate. I am terrified of needles, and envision nurses using them for javelin practice instead of effecting only the "slight pinch" they promise I will feel.

Equally as frightening is the idea of losing a vital part of my body. After all, I did make this blood myself.

I would think about giving blood and try to muster some courage, but at the last minute I would back out, thinking ... uhhh, maybe next time.

But there never was a next time and I have never given blood.

One week ago, I received a phone call telling me a close relative was in the Intensive Care Unit at a Boston hospital and was bleeding internally. She was receiving blood, however, and this week we learned it helped to save her life.

I could find solace only in my relief that more people were not like me.

This was me until two days ago, when I became someone from the other side: the people who unselfishly give of themselves to save a stranger's life. I gave blood. Unfortunately, I had to learn to do the right thing the hard way.

On Monday, I fumbled to the eighth floor in the Campus Center, filled out a health form, had my blood pressure taken, and joked a bit with sympathetic veterans, one of whom was donating blood on his birthday and another who had given blood 12 times.

It is all right to be afraid. But it is not all right to let fear stand between you and your ability to help give someone else a chance at life.

Maria Sacchetti

The American Red Cross, which sponsors blood drives here, performs tests to insure that you are eligible to give blood. Also, although I was slightly lightheaded (and only for a few minutes), the only pain I endured was when I accidentally stuck myself with a complimentary pin given to first-time donors.

The entire process, from the initial interview to giving blood to the recovery period, where they provide free food and pampering, takes about an hour. You are on the table giving blood only for about 10 to 15 minutes.

Slightly less than a pint is taken, and because we carry 10 to 12 pints each, the loss is made up in 24 hours. The donation is made via a sterile, non-reusable needle which is thrown away after you use it.

Still not convinced? Then let's think about those other than ourselves. People like my relative, or your family and friends. People in car accidents, heart patients, premature babies, burn victims, and scores of others. Ask yourself, is it fair to say, "No, I can't help you?" or worse, "I don't want to?"

Universities and colleges constitute 10 percent of the supply for New England. UMass was named an outstanding donor for 1989. The Red Cross is so dependent on donations by college students that they store extra blood before student vacations so that the blood supply does not deplete.

Do not wait for a personal tragedy to happen to make you realize the importance of giving blood. When I heard that my relative was receiving blood, I wished I could thank all of the people who had donated blood so that she could stay alive.

But more than anything, I wished that I were one of those people.

So when you see the signs this week or the next, don't walk by. Give blood and give someone a chance at life.

KATMANDU, Nepal — Tens of thousands of Nepalese paraded through Katmandu this week in a delirium of joy, chanting "Victory, Victory," to celebrate the government's agreement to establish a multiparty system.

In a stunning announcement just two days after police killed as many as 200 pro-democracy protestors, King Birendra told the people of this Himalayan land on Sunday that he was lifting a 29-year ban on political parties.

The city sprung to life this week after a two-day curfew was lifted, but a doctor at Bir Hospital said security forces had opened fire on celebrants Sunday night, killing at least one person and wounding two.

The doctor said the people who brought the casualties to the hospital reported that at least 10 others were killed and their bodies taken away by troops. The report could not be confirmed and police denied there was any firing.

Hundreds of processions by foot, cars and motor-powered rickshaws wound through the capital's main streets this morning.

"Today we will celebrate our freedom. We have no definite plan, but we only want to express our joy," said Yagya Nidha Duhal, his face smeared with red powder used by Nepalese during celebrations.

Most other processionists, including several Western tourists, sported the powder mark on their foreheads.

On Friday, police opened fire on a crowd of more than 200,000 people who were marching toward the royal palace to demand greater democracy.

Witnesses said as many as 200 people were killed but the government said only 10 people died and 107 were wounded. It was Nepal's worst bloodshed in more than a century.

The movement for greater democracy was launched Feb. 18 by the Nepali Congress Party and the United Left Front, a coalition of left-wing parties.

Late Sunday, marchers carried the red and white flags of the Nepali Congress, hugged each other and shouted: "Panchayat thieves go back. Hang the Panchayat," referring to the partyless national assembly, the Rashtriya Panchayat.

"When I was born 30 years ago, I could not breathe. Today I am like a free bird. I am so happy I want to fly," schoolteacher Nagandra Amatya said at Bir Hospital, where he had gone to meet the top Nepali Congress leader, Ganesh Man Singh.

Singh, who had led the movement from his hospital bed for the past week, walked out of his room today for the first time to greet people, who kissed his hands and cried with joy. He had been under house arrest before being taken to the hospital for treatment of arthritis and a urinary infection.

"Our responsibility has increased. The struggle for democracy was difficult, but it will be more difficult to maintain the democracy," the 75-year-old Singh said as he slowly walked out of his ward.

He said the future course of action would be decided later.

Foreign Minister Pashupati Rani said Sunday that elections for the yet-undissolved national assembly would be held soon, but gave no date. The opposition said it was ending its protests.

Four top opposition leaders met with King Birendra for an hour on Saturday night before this announcement.

"This will be the advent of human rights and freedom of speech in Nepal," said Sahana Pradhan, a member of the United Left Front and the only woman opposition leader to meet the king.

For 50 days, hundreds of thousands of people had taken part in demonstrations for a new political system in Nepal, where the monarchy wielded almost absolute power.

There had been demonstrations in the past, but support was limited to students and a small circle of political agitators. The current campaign drew drew doctors, lawyers and teachers who went on strike.

Then, the pilots of Royal Air Nepal walked off their jobs, followed by staffers in several state-run banks and even government ministries.

Birendra, 44, is the heir of the Shaha dynasty that has held the throne since the middle of the 18th century.

ARTS & LIVING

'Wenomaden' is mindful madness

By REBECCA HOLMES
Collegian Correspondent

"Wholly intelligible madness" said the Albuquerque Journal about Wenomadmen, an innovative and highly acclaimed piece of original theater which is brought to the Hampden Theater on Thursday, April 12.

Wenomadmen is an original work by the Detroit-based Theatre Grottesco. The ensemble is noted for the physicality, immediacy and imagination of its productions, drawing upon the expertise of its company members in a wide range of theatrical fields. Elements of dance, opera and mask making are combined to create a theater of images and text in which the comedy, the sadness, and the absurdity of life are highlighted.

Picture a hostile global desert in the modern middle ages. Society is concentrated into desperate metropolitan oases of life. Within these settlements new castes have been established — the Knowledge-keepers, the Builders, the Mystics, the Powerful and the Powerless.

Four figures wander the great desert — a builder, an entertainer's valet, a student and an umbrella carrier. They are bizarre refugees from a threatened city, plucked from their separate castes and set adrift in an alien environment. The stragglers each try to retain their identity whilst struggling for survival, but the codes of their former society become irrelevant and increasingly absurd. After all, what use is an umbrella carrier in the desert?

Pitted against the great leveller, Nature, the four characters strive to construct a new order of their own. From conflict and compromise a new society is created, yet its effect is to reduce the acts of everyday living to absurd rituals.

A scene from Theatre Grottesco's 'Wenomaden'

Wenomadmen has received widespread critical acclaim, and was praised by the Los Angeles Times for "...uncompromising social conscience, a polished physicality, and a knack for playing the part of provocateur." It promises a fresh and insightful look into the mechanics of society, and the true absurdity of the human condition. Wenomadmen is set somewhere in the modern middle ages of the future, but for reasons of social convenience and the ease of the audience the performance will begin at 8 p.m.

Theatre Grottesco is presented by Residential Arts as part of the Outer Limits series.

Enthusiastic project results in rocking against racism

By NICK OSTIS
Collegian Correspondent

Believe in an idea strongly enough and it just might come true. To hear boyish-looking professor Douglas Anderson, a playwright at Amherst College, tell it so exuberantly at midnight is fun.

"I played some rock 'n' roll as a kid and I've always been interested in its power," Anderson says. "One of the most interesting and exciting theatrical events is a rock concert, but I was never a good enough musician. I could never do it myself." "Last year a transfer student, Tom Marshall, a junior, walked into my office. I said to him, 'You're a little old to be a junior, aren't you?' And he said, 'Look, I've been playing in rock bands for the last 10 years.' Here was the guy who could realize my vision of beginning to explore rock 'n' roll in a more serious context."

The Marshall/Anderson project, Whitewash, a rock concert musical theater work, with a large multi-racial cast and live bands presented on a multi-tiered stage, is the result of their one-year reunion. The play explores the phenomenon of racial attacks and slurs raging across college campuses, supposed oases of acceptance and openmindedness. Anderson explains, "I've taught at the University of Illinois, Middlebury College and here. At each place, racial problems occured on campus. And, of course, what happened at UMass, then Smith last year really got me to thinking that this was time do some sort of piece which addresses the problem."

Since this is a play that takes place on campus — a play about young people — they decided to employ a certain musical vocabulary: Mowtown, R&B, rock and a little reggae, styles which Anderson feels reflect the uneasy interaction of races in United States.

Their primary source of information was the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), to which Marshall wrote from a list of reported incidents. An amazed Marshall recalls,"They sent me back a fine computer print out 16 pages long for one semester."

Last May, Marshall agreed to remain on campus all summer, turning his dorm room into a recording studio where the project evolved.

"I have to give credit where credit is due. Doug has a gift for the English language and an obsession for rhyme," Marshall muses. We would get together and come up with where the song wanted to and what specifically it wanted to say. And then Doug would sneak off with his computer and come back with a gorgeous lyric."

Anderson adds, "Tom wrote most of the music and then we hammered out the plot line. We had read and thought about these issues, but the student actors were the real authorities on the subject. Through discussion and improvisation, we began to see they had all experienced this kind of oppression and were eager to lend their voices to the play."

On writing for musical theater, Marshall has learned: "The trick is to find a melodic hook that is suggestive of the emotional impact you're trying to convey lyrically or ideologically. As Bertolt Brecht said, 'People should leave the theater thinking and humming.' So you'll feel the influence — I grew up listening to George Clinton, Doug grew up listening to James Brown. That's another facet of this whole piece. That we were born White, middle-class American youth and the music that turned us on was considered 30 years ago to be 'race records.' Stuff you couldn't even buy."

With lights designed by Michael Baumgarten, costumes by Joan Vick, sets by Jon Doyle and sound by Sun Sound of Northampton, this promises to be, if their enthusiasm is any indication, a provocative evening of theater.

Whitewash will be presented by the Amherst College Department of Theater and Dance on April 12-14 at Kirby Theater. All performances begin at 8 p.m. Admission is free, but reservations are recommended. Call 542-2277 weekdays from 1 p.m. to 4:30 p.m.

Bands unite for battered women

By SAM HARRIS
Collegian Correspondent

What can be done to stop widespread violence against women? This week at UMass, P.O.W.E.R. (Progressive Organization for Women's Rights at UMass), WOZQ and the Everywoman's Center at UMass will be sponsoring a group of events entitled Never Again a Battered Woman: A Week of Reflection and Response to Violence Against Women. The events will include workshops and a benefit concert Saturday afternoon at Pearl Street for Necessities/Necesidades, a battered women's program in Northampton. The benefit will feature Fugazi, Holy Rollers, The Brood, and Sex Kitchen.

Two of the Bands come from the Washington D.C. area and are on the Discord record label. Fugazi have two 12" EP's out and they will have a new album out soon. Their large following stems from their powerful live shows and their political consciousness. The Holy Rollers' "Origami Sessions" 7" has four songs and the coolest cover I have ever seen. They have a heavy psychedelic rock sound and Maria Jones is an amazing freaked out drummer.

The Brood is an all female band from Maine. Their music has a grungy/garagey sound reminiscent of the swinging '60s. Sex Kitchen is the only local band playing the show. They feature former members of Giget Goes to Hell and their energetic raw punk sound always packs the house.

The show is open to all-ages and starts promptly at 2 p.m. Tickets are $5 and are available at Main Street Records in Northampton, For the Record in Amherst and at the door the day of the show.

Other events scheduled for the week include a lecture on issues about violence against women by Gail Kielson from Necessities/Necesidades, a date rape workshop and a film screening and discussion.

The film, Dreamworlds is about women and rock videos and was written and produced by UMass Communications Professor Sut Jhally. For more information about the event during the week, call Gina Gombar at 665-2984 or Christy Colcord at 585-6748.

Fugazi will play at Friday's benefit.

'I Love You to Death' digs its own grave with stale gags

By GEORGE LENTZ
Collegian Staff

I Love You to Death has got so much going for it, you can't help but be disappointed by the outcome. Director Lawrence Kasdan (The Accidental Tourist, The Big Chill) can't seem to make heads or tales out of John Kostmayer's reluctant script; the film wants to be a dark comedy in the worst way, but it just doesn't have the heart.

THE SCREENING ROOM

Adulterous pizzeria owner Kevin Kline unknowingly has his freewheeling days numbered when his unaware wife (Tracey Ullman) finally gets smart about his philandering. Initially refusing to believe the suspicions of delivery boy River Phoenix (who has a crush on her), Ullman submits and plots revenge with her mother, Joan Plowright.

After a hired assassination attempt fails, they decide to spike Kline's pasta dinner with sleeping pills. When that fails, a reluctant Phoenix shoots him in the head, but Kline just won't die, lying in bed with what he believes is a "virus." Enter William Hurt and Keanu Reeves as a pair of stoned hit men who have even worse luck. When they shoot him, Kline awakens from his sedated sleep, groggily wondering why Ullman hasn't fed their "guests."

The whole film is essentially this one, long-running gag of the victim-who-won't-die, but this is precisely where the problems begin. The key element of the gag lies in the continued frustration of wanting to kill Kline but being unsuccessful at the task. But we know the characters simply don't have the heart to be cold-blooded killers and this ultimately defuses the joke. Kostmayer's script lacks the ruthlessness necessary to turn the situation into dark comedy. His characters aren't irritated by Kline's invincibility, just baffled.

The results are painfully clear in Kasdan's direction. We get the sense that he's not too sure what he's supposed to be getting from his actors and ends up forcing many of the film's comedic scenes. Hurt, Reeves and Kline suffer the most, pushed into overplaying caricature to generate laughs.

I Love You to Death is the first film Kasdan has directed that he hasn't written, and the results are obvious. The director seems detached from the story at times, displaying banality rather than subtlety. The comedic pace is all off. It's particularly frustrating given the immensely talented cast he's been given to work with, but the script likes its characters too much to give them the evil edge they need to make the comedy work.

Film Notes — Jack Nicholson's much awaited and much delayed film, The Two Jakes is now being slated for release this August after a year in post production; and Alan Rudolph (Love at Large) is set to begin filming a script on Gary Larson's Far Side comic strip.

ROOM CHOOSING PROCESS For Fall 1990

PLEASE READ CAREFULLY: IMPORTANT INFORMATION

RESERVING YOUR CURRENT ROOM ASSIGNMENT

If you intend to keep your present residence hall room assignment, you must sign up with the staff on duty during the room choosing process on Wednesday, April 18. THE ONLY DAY TO RESERVE YOUR CURRENT ROOM IS WEDNESDAY APRIL 18.

CHANGING YOUR ROOM OR YOUR HALL

If you wish to move to another room in the same residence hall, you must sign up with the staff on duty during the room choosing process on Thursday evening, April 19. All room changes will be determined by your seniority and rank. THE ONLY EVENING TO SIGN UP FOR A NEW ROOM IN YOUR CURRENT HALL IS THURSDAY, APRIL 19.

If you wish to move to another residence hall, you must complete a Housing Preference Form. DEADLINE FOR RETURNING HOUSING PREFERENCE FORMS TO THE HOUSING ASSIGNMENT OFFICE IS FRIDAY, APRIL 27.

IF YOU WANT TO KEEP YOUR CURRENT RESIDENCE HALL ASSIGNMENT WHILE ALSO REQUESTING A HALL CHANGE YOU MUST DO THE FOLLOWING:

1. Sign up for the same room on Wednesday, April 18 or a new room on Thursday evening, April 19.
2. Fill out a Preference Form. On the Preference Form in the lower right hand corner is a box you must 'check' if you wish to be returned to your current residence hall if your choices cannot be met.

YOUR OLD RESIDENCE HALL ASSIGNMENT IS GUARANTEED ONLY IF YOU DO BOTH STEPS.

ROOMMATE REQUESTS

If you wish to move to another residence hall to room with a student already assigned to that residence hall, you must together complete a green ROOMMATE REQUEST FORM. DEADLINE FOR RETURNING ROOMMATE REQUEST FORMS TO THE HOUSING ASSIGNMENT OFFICE IS FRIDAY, APRIL 20.

If you wish to become roommates with a student in a residence hall to which neither of you is currently assigned, you must each complete a Housing Preference Form. These forms should be identical, (with the exception of the 'check' box.) and stapled together. DEADLINE FOR RETURNING HOUSING PREFERENCE FORMS IS FRIDAY, APRIL 27.

DIDN'T GET THE ROOM YOU WANTED?

If, during the regular Room Choosing period, you were unable to secure a particular type of accomodation (a particular single or double room), please contact the Housing Assignment Office to fill out a blue In-House Room Request Form. Rooms that become available during the Summer will be assigned, according to seniority, to those residents who filled out this form and returned it to the Housing Assignment Office.

RESIDENCE HALL CONTRACT

The 1990-1991 Residence Hall Contract and Contract Card will be mailed to you in your current Residence Hall on or about April 23 as part of the Room Choosing process. These cards must be returned to the Housing Assignment Office by Thursday, May 24, 1990. FAILURE TO RETURN YOUR RESIDENCE HALL CONTRACT CARD BY THIS DEADLINE WILL SUBJECT YOUR FALL 1990 ASSIGNMENT TO CANCELLATION.

PAY FEE BILL BY DUE DATE

Your Fall 1990 fee bill will be mailed to you at home in early July. If complete payment of your semester fee bill is not received by the Bursar's Initial Due Date (usually early August), your assignment for the Fall semester is subject to cancellation. Be aware of this important obligation.

OTHER OBLIGATIONS

If you are going to be a Junior or Senior you will be required to confirm your Room Choosing arrangments by completing the Junior/Senior Room Confirmation Card which will be mailed to your home in late May. This card will be due June 22, 1990. FAILURE TO RETURN THIS CARD BY THE DEADLINE WILL CANCEL YOUR ASSIGNMENT.

In addition to properly completing room choosing all students are required to remain in good standing with the University at all times. Being withdrawn for any reason after the end of the semester will automatically cancel your assignment. Check to make sure you do not owe any fees to the Bursar's BEFORE you leave for the summer.

QUESTIONS?

If you still have questions about the Room Choosing process, please contact the Housing Assignment Office (545-2100), 235 Whitmore. Thank you.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your income gets a giant boost, thanks to overseas investments. Popularity is a big factor in your business success. Community service proves fulfilling. Get your friends and neighbors involved.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Concentrate on getting organized and your work will go better. Friends are willing to help you solve a financial problem. A more realistic attitude toward romance will relieve domestic tension.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Keep your personal relationships on an even keel. A temporary disappointment will help you find new ways to meet emergencies. You gain self-confidence by solving your own problems. Romance is lively.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Write influential people who could be helpful in the near future. A long-term romance is working out better than you thought possible. A loved one wants to share an important secret. Listen.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Steer a conservative course in business negotiations or your private finances. Missed meetings will cause tension but bring basic differences out in the open. Postpone making major financial decisions.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You did the right thing in quitting a meaningless job. It is not too late to start type up resume and submit applications for the summer. An exciting romance or friendship is worth all the tension it creates.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Play the observer today; let others carry the ball while you make plans. You play the good Samaritan and feel a quiet glow. Show restraint at the bar and the dinner table.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Focus on updating your wardrobe and polishing your image. You can combine business with pleasure on a work trip. Plan to spend time with friends in the evening. Romance is uncertain.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Avoid sounding rebellious or hasty. Make peace overtures to your co-workers and friends. When your head and heart work in tandem, family support will be yours. Remain cool if others make mistakes.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Put work obligations first today but try not to upset a loved one. You should be in for a great evening. The news from abroad looks promising for your business or career.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Your personal manner is very important in business today. Be sure to project confidence and warmth. Take the time to put checks in the mail. Evaluate your financial assets and obligations.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Real estate ventures and family matters are your top priorities today. Financial goals can be discussed this evening. You may be tempted to go off your diet. Hang tough! Show real will power.

Sophomore Donna Murphy was a shining but muddy example of the Gazelles' hustling abilities. In the first half she scored the third and fifth goals in addition to being verbally warned for rough play. In the second she was yellow carded, and subsequently ejected with a red card with 3:12 remaining in regulation.

"Murphy and [senior Ann] King controlled the ball really well," said Bossio. "They both played a great game."

Sophomore Dolores Angulo held eight draw controls, over half. Sophomore Christine Pearsall scored the fourth and sixth goals, Splaine assisting the fourth. Freshman Amy Pond initiated the scoring in the first at 20:50.

"The defense really made a difference in the game," Bossio said. "Communication was solid — it helps to keep you organized."

The D put the reigns on BC in the first as they shot 0-for-6. They faltered a bit in the second, then surged again the last fifteen minutes of the game. Freshman Marina Krobisch was yellow carded in the second. Senior Michele Pytko, sophomore Andrea Goldman, sophomore Cynthia Dolce and freshman Sam Eustace consistently gave their all. They played fantastic, Bossio said.

The Gazelles are currently 2-5, and looking to face an unwavering Brown University today at 3:30 p.m. on Totman Field.

Boggs, Sox walk away with 4-2 win over Tigers

BOSTON (AP) — Detroit manager Sparky Anderson's strategy worked, but the end result was all too familiar.

Anderson ordered Wade Boggs walked intentionally three times — tying a major-league record — but Tony Pena singled home two runs in a four-run third inning yesterday, leading the Boston Red Sox to a 4-2 victory over the Tigers.

It was Boston's 10th victory in a row over the Tigers.

"I'll do it every time the situation occurs," Anderson said after the Red Sox stranded eight runners after the walks to Boggs. "You don't have to be a Harvard professor to manage baseball."

Boggs' three intentional walks ties a major league record for a nine-inning game, shared by many. Roger Maris and Garry Templeton share the record of four in extra innings.

Pena singled in the first, drove in two runs with a bases-loaded single in the third and ripped a double in the fifth.

Mike Boddicker, beaten by Detroit last June 14 before Boston began its winning streak, allowed two runs and five hits in five innings, then got the victory with relief help from Dennis Lamp, Rob Murphy and Lee Smith.

Detroit starter Kevin Ritz lasted 2 1-3 innings, giving way to Dan Petry after allowing seven hits and four runs.

With one out in the third, Ellis Burks and Dwight Evans singled, and Billy Jo Robidoux walked, filling the bases.

Pena, signed as a free agent during the offseason, poked a single to right, scoring Burks and Evans, and Jody Reed followed with a double to left, scoring Robidoux. Petry replaced Ritz, and Pena scored as Kevin Romine grounded out.

Boddicker blanked Detroit on three hits for four innings. Then, he gave up two runs in the fifth. Larry Sheets singled for the second of his three hits, and Chet Lemon was hit by a pitch. Both runners moved up as Dave Bergman grounded out, and Sheets scored as Tony Phillips grounded to second. Lemon scored on a single by Alan Trammell.

Lamp pitched 1 1-3 innings, then was bailed out by Murphy with runners on first and second and one out in the seventh. Murphy, making his second appearance in two games, went on to hold the lead, then yielded to Smith in the ninth.

Gazelles win home opener

Strong first half helps women's lax to 9-5 victory over BC

By ADRIENNE MATT
Collegian Staff

Good communication and a solid defensive effort are the nuts and bolts of Patti Bossio's squad. She and her team proved it as the Universtiy of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team pivoted past the Boston College Eagles 9-5 on Totman Field yesterday.

The Gazelles hustled without scrambling and kept their turnovers to a minimum (16). The hot stick of the game belonged to freshman Rachael Splaine who finished with four goals and one assist. A yellow card in the second half was indicative of her aggressive play.

"She has an awesome amount of speed, and she really put it to work," said head coach Bossio. "She had a great game. She really knows how to make things happen."

The Eagles remained scoreless and rather clueless in the first half (8-0). By then the rain had washed the sleep out of their eyes and they began to perform.

Being ahead at the half was a new and awkward position for the Gazelles to be in, coach Bossio agreed: "They were surprised at being ahead. They came out more relaxed in the second half."

Not a wise move however, since the Eagles were eager to rally. Senior Katie Connelly popped the Eagles first goal with 23:14 in the second half. Six minutes later sophomore Katherine Finch scored, answered by the Gazelles in two minutes by Splaine. Tri-captain Connelly bounced in another five minutes later with an assist from Finch.

Twelve minutes of impressive Gazelle defense followed as they contained an eager BC squad. Connelly scored the fourth goal with 6:27 remaining. Junior Allison Laine shot the final goal of the game at 5:01. The Eagles shot 5-for-9 in the second.

"We came out hungry," said Bossio. "Everyone from bench to field contributed."

To say the Gazelles dominated the first half is an unjust understatement. They shot 8-for-14. Goals were made within two to four minutes of each other — the onslaught was relentless.

Baseball falls short

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts baseball team dropped an ugly 8-7 decision to the University of Connecticut in a game where the sloppiness befitted the gray, drizzly skies overhead.

The two teams combined for 11 errors, while UMass pitchers walked 11 Husky batters.

Connecticut trailed 7-6 entering the bottom of the ninth, but the Huskies rapidly erased that deficit. After a pop-up single which fell between outfielders Mike Tobin and Brian Bright and second baseman Dan Biangini put a runner on first, catcher Derek Dana threw the ball into center field on an attempted sacrifice.

With runners on first and third and no outs, UMass coach Mike Stone replaced Keith Abernathy with Scott Meaney. Meaney battled the next batter to a 3-2 count before walking him.

Todd Rosenthal pinch hit for UConn and came through with a two-run single to account for the final score.

The Minutemen came through with single runs in the top of the seventh and eighth, scoring in less than spectacular fashion. In the seventh, infielder Steve Corradi singled and stole second with one out. Corradi came home to score when UConn third baseman Ken Coffey missed a throw from the catcher after a wild pitch.

In the eighth, pinch-runner Dave Edwards scored from second base on an error by the pitcher, who threw wildly after trying to get a double play at second.

Keith Abernathy took the loss for UMass, though he didn't pitch badly. Abernathy entered the game in the seventh, replacing John Russell. Although Abernathy struck out two of the three batters he faced in the inning, a double error by catcher Dana and Tobin lead to a UConn run which tied the game at 6-6.

Craig Gaudio took the win for the Huskies, entering the game in the seventh inning with UConn trailing 6-5. He pitched the rest of the game, benefitting from the UConn rally.

UMass starter Dan O'Leary struggled with his control, walking seven batters and allowing four earned runs in five innings.

Gorillas face Providence today

Friars meet UM for first time ever

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

The men's lacrosse team, ranked 12th in this week's national poll, returns to The Hill today to face Providence College at 3 p.m.

This is the very kind of game that coaches fear.

Today at 3 p.m. for the first time ever, the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team plays host to Providence College at The Hill.

With undefeated and second-ranked Yale University on the horizon Saturday, it would be very easy for the Gorillas to try to mail this one in.

But UMass coach Dick Garber will have to caution his team to not take any opponent lightly. Remember last year, with Syracuse next in line, that the Gorillas sleep-walked through a rough 11-9 win over an inferior Boston College team.

Looking at their record (5-1), the Friars look decent. Except that their wins haven't exactly come against national powers (New Haven, Vermont, Bates, Siena and Canisius). A more accurate gauge would be an 18-1 pounding from third-ranked crosstown rival Brown University.

This is only the 11th season for lacrosse at Providence, and of this year's 30 players, 20 are either freshmen or sophomores.

Freshman attack Donato Bianco leads the scorer with 20 points (7 goals, 13 assists). Leading snipers are sophomore attack Ed Loiselle (13 goals) and sophomore midfielder Brendan Cunningham (11). In the nets will probably be freshman Rich Dunphy, who has started all six games and has a .609 save percentage.

Gorilla Grumblings: Proving that good teams always seem to get things their way, Syracuse University succeeded in talking UMass into switching their game to Sunday, May 8. Originally scheduled for the day before, it would have been played outdoors at the much-cozier Coyne Field, because SU graduation was using up the cavernous CarrierDome.

Syracuse, as expected, was still firmly entrenched in the top spot in this week's U.S. Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association poll. Yale and Brown remained second and third, while Loyola (fourth) and North Carolina (fifth) also stayed put.

UMass, by the way, moved up to 12th after a few teams dropped games this past weekend. Maryland and Johns Hopkins dropped into a tie for 13th and Cornell fell to 14th.

Again, another chapter in the mysterious case of Johns Hopkins, which lost its third straight game Saturday against North Carolina, 11-6. At 2-4, the BlueJays are already teetering on that fine line the NCAA draws for its 12-team playoff picture. They may get a break, considering their national prominence, but they'd better not lose again.

On a more local note, today's game will be broadcast by New England Sports Network on a tape-delayed basis. It can be seen Friday at 3 p.m. This is the first of three games NESN will broadcast, including Apr. 25 against Harvard and May 1 against Boston College.

Just a reminder that all UMass games, home and away, can be heard live on WMUA 91.1-FM with Mike Fagerson, Randy Krutzler and Scott Klane.

Statistically speaking for UMass, junior attack Jim McAleavey leads in scoring with 32 points (13 goals, 19 assists). Tied in goals are senior attack Rob Codignotto and senior midfielder Tim Soudan with 16 each.

McAleavey needs six assists to reach 100 for his career. Only three others have done that in UMass history.

JV Gorillas tipped by Army,

The University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse club team battled the Army jayvees Monday, losing 11-10.

Army led, 3-0 at the end of the first period, but UMass stopped the Army offense to take a 4-3 halftime lead. The teams traded goals in the second half, but a late Army surge gave the Cadets an 11-8 lead with two minutes left.

UMass scored two quick goals to pull within one, but couldn't get the last shot to fall.

Scoring for the jayvee Gorillas were Bill Robinson (three goals), Dan Connors (two) and Jon Riber, Scott Anzivino, Paul Cronin, Sean Dacus and Gary Murad (one apiece). Goalie Jay Gelb had 17 saves.

Several shine for women's track at Dartmouth

By DEBI LU COUTURIER
Collegian Correspondent

A small contingent from the University of Massachusetts women's track and field team ventured north last Saturday to compete in a dual meet with the "Green Machine" of Dartmouth College in Hanover, N.H.

What the team lacked in numbers, it more than made up for in talent and effort, despite falling to Dartmouth, 80-53.

Only two women represented UMass in the throwing events. Senior Tina White threw the hammer 143-4 for second place, a school record and qualification for both the New England and ECAC championships, as well as respect from a Dartmouth team that is a well-known New England powerhouse in throwing events.

The second half of the dynamic duo was freshman Rachel Castriotta, who demonstrated that she was unimpressed with the Dartmouth reputation by throwing the hammer 124-4 to finish third, the shot 33-1 for second place and then tossing the discus 125-2 for another second place. Castriotta qualified for the New Englands in all three events. A clutch performance by freshman Kathy Hennessey in the high jump earned her third place.

With the team somewhat decimated by illness, UMass coach Julie LaFreniere called upon her athletes to participate in several events. Freshman Lennice Johnson rose to the challenge, running to two second place finishes in the 100- and 400-meter hurdles and two firsts as part of the 4x100 and 4x400-meter relays.

Freshman Dana Smith ran a leg in both of the victorious relays and also placed third in the 400 meters. Sue McFadyen, known for her explosive starts from the blocks, helped in the winning efforts of the 400-meter relay.

Senior Shana Smith, a well-respected All-New England cross country runner, showed no fear of the nationally-ranked Dartmouth distance team. Smith ran to a second place finish in her warm-up 800-meter race and then went on to win to 3000-meter event by a five-second margin with a time of 10:19.

Smith did not run alone. In the 800 meters, Michelle St. Laurent finished third, just four-tenths of a second behind Smith. Cathy Crocker joined the fray and finished a mere two-tenths behind St. Laurent. Kathy Holt and Cate Dean joined Smith in the 3000 and finished third and fourth, respectively.

Sophomore Lee Ann Ambrose, last year's track MVP, proved that the honor was no fluke. She began this spring season by winning all five events she entered — the 100-meter dash (12.37 seconds), the 400 (57.54), 200 (25.3) and a leg in the 4x100.

But the event that left all spectators watching in amazement and disbelief was Ambrose's thrilling run as the anchor for the 4x400 relay. Ambrose received the baton with Dartmouth in command with a 45-yard lead. An insurmountable advantage? Not for Ambrose.

Almost as if time itself were standing still, Ambrose narrowed the gap, then pulled alongside her bewildered opponent and passed with a final surge to a phenomenal 54.2 second split and a two-tenths of a second victory for the team.

GEO demands election

Civil disobedience action threatened

By DAVID FORRESTER
Collegian Staff

The Graduate Employee Organization voted by an overwhelming majority last night to stage a civil disobedience action on April 24 if Chancellor Duffey refuses to negotiate what the organization called "a fast and fair" union election.

Renee Heberle, GEO coordinating committee member who proposed the action, said GEO members will blockade all entrances to Whitmore administration building.

Nearly three quarters of the over 200 GEO members in attendance at the Campus Center membership meeting vocally expressed a willingness to be arrested if necessary during the action.

Heberle voiced concern over the affect of the civil disobedience on the undergraduates.

"Civil disobedience doesn't hurt undergraduates," she said. "It is a direct action against Whitmore."

Coordinating committee member Marc Kenen said GEO's proposals are a reaction to the Board of Trustees' approval of Duffey's plan for graduate students to vote on unionization.

GEO finds Duffey's proposal unacceptable because it requires the collective bargaining group to win the election by a majority of all eligible voters, Kenen said.

"It's nearly impossible to get that kind of turnout," he said.

In Duffey's plan, if one of the eligible voters doesn't vote, that vote is counted against the unionization, Kenen said.

The full 1400 GEO members plan to vote by secret ballot on a proposal to strike on May 9 and withhold undergraduate grades.

Heberle stressed that witholding grades would not affect students. "Arrangements can be made for seniors and transferring students," she said.

Several members voiced anger over what they perceived as Duffey's hostility and disrespect toward graduate students.

Kenen claimed Duffey would not return the group's calls and allowed them to see his proposal only an hour before his meeting with the Trustees.

Many members said Duffey is now the main focus of their efforts.

"It's all in Duffey's lap," many speakers said.

GEO member Mike Cooley said, "When push came to shove he [Duffey] screwed us."

Kenen said one trustee has indicated that the majority of the trustees backed Duffey's proposal.

He also said the GEO has received information contradicting the administration's assertion that recognition of the GEO would be illegal.

This information was unconfirmable in order to maintain the anonymity of the informant, he added.

The GEO also voted to attend today's rally in Boston, picket at Whitmore on Friday and begin teaching classes in the administration building beginning April 17.

University to operate child care system

By SARAH DEMASTER
Collegian Staff

After months of deliberation, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson Monday accepted the Child Care Options Advisory Group recommendation that the University operate its own child care centers rather than contract out to a private vendor.

In a letter to the campus community, Madson said he will work with the Advisory Group to implement and evaluate a modification of the present child care system on a trial basis for the next fiscal year.

Madson said because of recent increases in fringe benefits and overhead costs, University Child Care would have had an operating deficit of approximately $180,000.

Joseph Zannini, director of Housing Services, said the Group proposed a $170,000 savings plan to offset the deficit. The plan includes a $140,000 reduction in teaching, administrative and clerical positions, and a 10 percent sliding scale fee increase, which the University hopes would bring in $30,000.

Fees range from $67.80 to $112 per week for toddlers, and $57 to $97 per week for pre-school children, he said.

Madson said the decision "will allow [University child care] to enjoy continuity of staff and curriculum and take advantage of the model curriculum and supervision process that has evolved over the years."

Jolene Hart, a teacher at the Grass Roots Day School in Bowditch Lodge, said, "We're all pretty happy about it."

However, she added, "I'm uneasy that it's another year, then we may have to worry about it again."

The Leadership Coalition, composed of parents, campus unions, student organizations and teachers, is also pleased with the decision, according to a letter released yesterday by the leader, Joanne Levenson.

The Coalition has protested contracting out, because "it would lower the quality of child care, would result in the loss of good union jobs, and would decrease the accessibility and diversity of the centers," according to the letter.

Zannini said the University decided not to accept any of the three private vendors bids because their proposals "didn't leave the University in the best financial position."

Prior to examining the bids, the University had hoped the vendors would provide child care without payment, Zannini said. However, all the vendors would have required the University to pay a management fee to the company, he said.

In addition, Zannini said the vendors wanted the University to make up the difference if the child care centers were to lose money. He said he assumes the vendors were concerned about decreased revenues from the University's sliding fee scale.

If the University were to accept one of the vendors' proposals fees would have be increased by 15 percent.

Benefit promotes drug-free driving

Rock music, red balloons, a 20-foot long trailer in the shape of a giant blue radio and the prospect of winning a new car drew passers-by to a fund-raiser outside of the Student Union yesterday to benefit Students Against Driving Drunk and the UMass chapter of Bacchus, a Greek Area organization for responsible drinking.

Students gathered near Springfield's WAQY Rock 102 "incredible boom box" that was broadcasting live from campus to promote the event. People were asked to donate money for two chances to guess how many compact discs would fit into the "MUSICMOBILE," a GrandAm Coup also parked outside the Student Union.

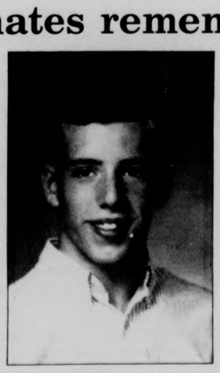
Family, floormates remember Mangion

By MARGARET McATEER
Collegian Correspondent



Joel Mangion

Some 40 of Joel Mangion's friends and relatives gathered in Kennedy Residence Hall last night to honor the memory of the 18-year-old University of Massachusetts freshman who died one month ago when he fell from a beam while elevator surfing.

Mangion's family, his floormates and friends from his hometown of Newton gathered to remember him through laughter, conversation and the simple act of sharing a meal.

The memorial was planned by Julie McCrea, Kennedy resident director, who organized it with the help of Kennedy House Council and members of the 16th floor, where Mangion lived.

"We knew before break that we wanted to do something after we came back," she said. "We wanted to have a gathering of friends."

Those in attendance wore white carnations and blue ribbons, because blue was one of Mangion's favorite colors, she said.

A photo of Mangion and a poem he wrote called "Liferose" were on display. The plaque will eventually be displayed in the lobby.

His father Robert, and two friends shared some feelings and anecdotes about Mangion. His stepmother Johanna, his brother Jonathan, and his sister Sarah also were in attendance.

"I've been very sad about Joel's death and I've shed some tears for Joel," his father said. "These tears and sadness we feel are gifts of love. I really believe that they are good for you."

He stressed that these feelings are good

Anti-ethnic notes: Combat with action

By DARREN GARNICK
Collegian Staff

In the wake of recent incidents of anti-ethnic harassment at the University of Massachusetts, students and community leaders met in the Campus Center last night to discuss ways to combat acts of prejudice.

In the past few weeks, Jewish, Black and gay students have received threatening mail attacking their backgrounds. Five panelists, invited by a joint committee of the UMass Black/Jewish Coalition, Hillel and the Third World Caucus, echoed each other's suggestions of how the community should react to such incidents.

Participating in the panel discussion were Charri Boykin-East, a representative of the Amherst chapter of the NAACP; William Burt, assistant district attorney for Hampshire County; Rabbi Saul Perlmutter, director of UMass Hillel; Sherwood Thompson, director of UMass Office of Third World Affairs and Lt. Mike Grabieck from the Civil Disorders Unit of the UMass Department of Public Safety.

The most important step in fighting anti-ethnic hatred is to immediately report incidents to the police, the panelists said.

"There is no way you can be a victim and remain silent," Thompson said. "Your silence will always bury you."

"I grew up in South Carolina under the Jim Crow laws," he said. "It wasn't silence that brought an end to desegregation."

Grabieck said UMass police officers are trained to recognize hate incidents and are "well-versed in civil rights laws."

However, he said, the police need help. "A police department is only as good as the people in the community. We can't be everywhere. We need witnesses to stand up and say 'I saw this happen,'" Grabieck said.

Recalling an incident in which a student wrote an ethnic slur on a blackboard in front of 20 people yet no one was willing to bear witness, Grabieck said: "As long as this attitude happens, [hate incidents] are going to continue. Someone has to stand up and be counted."

Burt said under Massachusetts state law, hate crimes are punishable by a prison sentence up to 10 years and/or a fine of up to $5,000. But these penalties are for incidents which involve acts or threats of physical intimidation or force, he said.

Black/Jewish Coalition Co-President Alisa Meshenberg, who moderated the panel discussion, said it is an individual's obligation to report these incidents.

"There are many resources we are not paying attention to on campus," she said.

SGA filibuster stops vote

By LISA SHAPIRO
Collegian Staff

An amendment to the Student Government Associate constitution, seeking to allocate a base figure of $5,000 to area governments plus $1 per student from the Student Activities Trust Fund, was blocked by zealous filibusters resulting with a call to the campus police.

The amendment was never considered at last night's meeting of the Undergraduate Student Senate. Aside from approving the minutes from last week's meeting, the only other order passed was to table the first draft of next year's budget.

Speaker Dan Chesnicka refused to recognize Sens. Ted Chambers (Commuters) and Howard Dreyfus (Pierpont) after ruling several of their motions dilatory — delaying senate proceedings by interference.

After continuous shouts for roll call votes, Chambers, Dreyfus and some 10 others, rushed the podium and sang the national anthem.

The senate voted to expel the two members from the room but after Campus Center security escorted them out, Chambers and Dreyfus returned. Chesnicka asked Sen. Jeff Turco (Brown) to call the police. After three officers talked to Chambers and Dreyfus outside the room, they did not return.

The meeting recessed at 8:30 p.m., and adjourned an hour later due to lack of quorum. During the recess, members from three Registered Student Organizations spoke in support of the amendment.

Regardless of the passage of the motion, RSOs will be severely affected by budget cuts for the upcoming year, however approval of the motion will significantly lessen the effects of the cuts.

Following the disruption, Finance Committee Chair Chris Lycette received a standing ovation after delivering a powerful resignation speech.

Lycette, who sent luck to the senate which he called unsure, disorganized and lacking in self-respect, asked, "Why is it so impossible for students at UMass to work together? I urge you to start a new SGA tonight. When you call for roll call votes, to whom are you truly doing service? The senate should be a united force working together for student concerns."

Chesnicka said: "With its drastic action, the senate sent a clear message that it is ready to deal with issues and will not be ruled by filibusters."

Seminar addresses minority needs

Educational system ignores diverse needs of students of color

By KENDRA PRATT
Collegian Staff

The state's educational system has failed to effectively respond to the diverse needs of minority students, said Robert Sinclair, director of Curriculum Studies. A seminar addressing the issue of minority students and the system's ignorance of their unique needs will be sponsored by the School of Education tomorrow.

The seminar, titled "Creating Responsive Learning Communities," will be attended by students and faculty from the School of Education and 39 elementary and secondary Massachusetts public schools.

"If we lose these marginal students who have fallen below the standards of learning, society won't benefit and students lose the opportunity to lead productive lives in our community," he said. "The educational system needs to reach and restore them to productive learning."

Pulitzer Prize winner Tracy Kidder will speak about Among Schoolchildren, a book which he wrote after observing an elementary class in Holyoke, at 1:15 p.m.

The seminar will begin at 8:30 a.m. in Memorial Hall with opening statememts from Sinclair and Bryant Robinson, the assistant superintendent of the Springfield school system. Robert Tyler, who has served as an educational consultant to seven presidents, is scheduled to speak about educational leadership.

Susan Schuman, an educational program coordinator, said, "Diversity, whether students speak other languages or are from a different culture, is often seen as a handicap. We will address how we can take advantage of diversity to make it a strength and not a weakness.'

Greek Area members staffed tables where people turned in their guesses and picked up information on how to start a local chapter of SADD. Contracts for life, a pledge college students sign agreeing to seek a safe, sober ride if a driver has had too much to drink were also being distributed.

The fund-raiser, which runs today and tomorrow from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m., is part of a joint campaign between Pontiac and SADD to raise awareness of the problem of driving drunk. The University of Massachusetts was one of 50 college sites selected for the campaign.

The top two prizes for the guess closest to how many discs can fit in the car, determined by Pontiac, are a compact disc player with 25 discs. Third prize is a portable cassette player and a subscription to Spin magazine.

All entries become eligible for the grand prize, a 1990 Pontiac LeMans or Firebird. For $1, $3 or $5 donation entrants received a SADD pin, Pontiac frisbee or t-shirt.

The campus raising the most money wins $10,000 for student activities funds.

Tim Galligan, president of Bacchus, said people were not just eyeing the prizes, but were interested in the information provided on driving drunk and asking questions about alcohol.

"There are too many people that drive drunk around Amherst. Nobody should do it," he said. "It is one of the most stupidest things you could do."

J. Trevor Hughes, a senior political science major, who works as a waiter in the Hotel Northampton, said he sees people driving home night after night after drinking.

"You can only ask them if they want a taxi so many times. Something really has to be done about drinking and driving," he said.

Drunk driving used to be a problem at Wachusett Regional High School, where junior natural resources studies major Mike Spanknebel attended high school.

"SADD helped our high school. By senior year there were no [student] drunk driving accidents," Spanknebel said.

Senior economics major Greg Graves said he used to drive drunk often, but no longer does. "I've become more aware of the legal ramifications," he said. "I'm more conscious that I could kill someone as a result of driving drunk."

Graves said too many people drive drunk, and added that trying to "dry out" the campus will only make things worse. "More people will go to off-campus parties and people drive home drunk," he said.

Environmental officials fix leak

The University of Massachusetts Police and the Environmental Health and Safety personnel used an absorbent to soak up oil leaking from a truck stuck in a dirt path north of Eastman Lane Tuesday. The absorbent was required due to the proximity of the spill to a stream.

LARCENY

- A woman reported the theft of her 35 mm camera, valued at $300, from the eleventh floor of the Campus Center on Wednesday.

DISTURBANCES

- A student removed a Health Services detour sign from a room in Washington Residence Hall Tuesday and was warned. No charges have been made.
- A man was cited for failure to stop at a stop sign in a related motor vehicle accident near the Southwest horseshoe Tuesday.

Eric B. Cady of Acton, the driver of the cited vehicle, slid on wet pavement after attempting to stop and hit a truck travelling southbound on University Drive. Damages were estimated at over $1500.

"That's one thing that Joel really wanted to do. He really wanted to make a difference," he said, noting Mangion's efforts to help his family and friends with problems. "You can make a difference. We are survivors here."

He gave each person a photo of Mangion that was taken while their family was picnicking on top of Mt. Holyoke during Parents' Weekend last semester.

"He really had a zest for life," his father said. "Like a lot of teenagers, especially boys, he took a lot of risks and didn't really think about it."

Matthew Germino, the resident assistant on Mangion's floor, thanked his father for talking to them and said the floor had really come together to deal with the death.

Mangion's roommate, Sang Oh, a freshman, said: "I'd just like to say it's been really tough. I'd just like to say thanks."

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted

Look beyond comics page

The Collegian has recently been bombarded with complaints. We've received a letter signed by 21 people. We've received calls at 1 a.m. The dining halls are buzzing with talk. People are outraged. About what? The University's investments in South Africa?

No. About Calvin and Hobbes.

The strip has been missing from the pages of the Collegian for a few days because we lost the folder that the syndicate sends to us. So to clarify one thing, the Collegian is not trying to deny readers the privilege of having a little to laugh at each day.

On the other hand, why is this, of all issues, causing so much outrage? Why aren't people speaking out on budget cuts? Why aren't they reacting to investments in South Africa?

Michael Wester

If you really want to see Calvin and Hobbes, there are other places to turn. If you go to the periodical section of the library, you'll find a number of different papers that carry it.

But within the same pages of those "professional" papers, you will not see coverage of the communities that comprise UMass.

The point is this: The Collegian provides things that other papers don't.

Think about this: When was the last time you've seen coverage of the lesbian, bisexual and gay community in any paper besides the Collegian?

Aha! Some may say, but I don't care about such special interest communities!

Well, think about it again. If you don't limit yourselves to reading the lunch menu and the comics page, you might just find that the "wants of an outspoken few" are the concerns of the college community as a whole. Even if you don't agree with the opinions expressed by these so-called few, at least maybe you'll begin to think about things.

Next time you open the Collegian and don't see Calvin, read something else. Look at page one. Look at the Focus page. Look at the Black Affairs page. These pages and stories can be of interest, and of vital concern, to everyone. Even stories about particular communities of which you may not be a part.

I'm sure that anyone, including heterosexuals, would have been affected if they had read Chris Muther's story about a career forum for lesbian, bisexual and gay students. Hey seniors, you think you have problems looking for a job? Try feeling that you have to hide your identity during an interview.

I know this sounds outrageous, but think of the Collegian as part of your education: Enjoy it. Rebel against it. Comment on it. Add to it.

Don't read the Collegian just to entertain yourselves before class starts. Read it to inform yourself.

The comics page is not supposed to be a forum for nationally syndicated strips. In fact, the comics page is nothing more than an entertaining trick. It's in there to get you to pick up the paper in hopes you'll move on to something else — and maybe, just maybe, something that actually matters will rub off on you.

The comics page gives members of the community the opportunity to practice their art. I can think of many strips that are funnier than the ones we print. But we're giving some people a chance that they wouldn't have otherwise. And your criticisms are welcome. I'm sure the cartoonists aren't so set in their ways that suggestions wouldn't help.

Besides, Bill Watterson isn't God. If you look closely, you'll find that Watterson frequently recycles old Peanuts strips.

Historical evolution of the African National Congress ignored

During his recent visit to Namibia, Secretary of State James Baker dealt a serious blow to the evolution of democracy in South Africa.

According to The New York Times, Mr. Baker stated that it should be the Bush administration's policy to give American aid to the African National Congress (ANC) "as it did [for] Solidarity in Poland and opposition parties in Nicaragua."

This favorable comparison of Solidarity and UNO to the ANC not only reveals Mr. Baker's lack of understanding of the historical evolution of these groups, but seems to imply that it is now United States policy to support Marxism in southern Africa.

Truly democratic movements do not call for the nationalization of industry and a centralized state economy. They do not claim to be the sole representative of the people, burning to death, by "necklacing," all "collaborators" and "traitors" who do not agree with them.

They do not call upon the people to increase violence and "make the nation ungovernable" in the name of the revolution, and they do not consider themselves to be brothers in arms with the Communist Party.

Mr. Baker of all people should be able to recognize these distinct differences.

Passover celebration reminder of oppression, liberation

At this time each year, the anger within me for 12 months surfaces. Passover is a celebration of the Jewish people.

It is a time for my people to reflect on a history of oppression and resistance — of injustice and struggle. Each year we rejoice in our survival through centuries of persecution.

Two years ago I sat with my family at the Seder table. As we began to read aloud the story of the Jews' escape from Egypt and the persecution we had lived with there, silence fell and our eyes met. As we sat and gave thanks for our liberation, the Intifadah raged against the brutality of Israeli occupation and oppression.

My anger is that of a man who has had heritage stolen from him and misused, exploited to further the interests of neither the Jewish people or humanity, but a brutal and unfeeling few.

Mine is the anger of a man called a "self-hating Jew" because I resist to be used for hateful ends, because I speak out for justice and not for what has been defined from above as the aspirations of my people.

Mine is the confusion of not understanding why more American Jews do not feel this anger of having their heritage shit upon and used to cloak the oppression with which we should be so familiar.

For centuries my people have stood with the oppressed and fought for justice. And today, the small elite terrorizes Jews into abandoning the beauty of our history.

Jewish "leaders" hold us and our history hostage as they terrorize us into believing that Zionism is the correct Jewish ideology. Should a Jew speak of justice for Palestinians, she is branded a traitor and has her history ripped from her.

Jeremy Levinson

Let there be no doubt that the Palestinian people are being oppressed in the name, and name only, of Judaism — stolen Judaism. In Germany, they burned the houses of Jewish dissidents. In Europe, they killed our children and ran us from our homes.

Indeed, the only connection between the state-terror of contemporary Israel and the history of my people is the science of terror with which we have had so much experience.

Zionists often point to the plethora of Arab nations. This, the crux of the "they have theirs" argument against an independent Palestine is nothing more than racism.

When we refuse the word Palestinian, we refuse to see a people and their struggle. Jews are familiar with the pain of being told that we are not a people. Palestinians will defend their history as the Jewish people have had to for centuries.

When we veer from reality to concoct rationale for the blowing up of houses, the forcible closing of schools, the murder of activists and the other brutalities of Israeli military occupation, we become the most dangerous threat to Judaism.

As a person and a Jew, I cannot support an Apartheid state called Israel. I would love to support a democratic nation that strives for peace with its neighbors.

Out of love for all people and for my history, I advocate the continued application of the Jewish heritage to the causes of freedom, equality and peace. To support a nation that works against these historical tides is to ignore our own history. To support a nation that oppressed in the name of Judaism is to destroy our history and defame the value of our culture.

All peoples have or will have their own "Passover." I will spend mine fighting the exploitation of my heritage and rejoicing in that part of the human spirit that makes liberation the object of all human history.

Until freedom comes for Palestine, Zionist Israel remains the largest threat to my people and our history. As a person and as a Jew, I am obligated to speak up.

Let us join with Palestinians and struggle for freedom for both peoples.

Graduates give employment rather than education priority

Graduate students are students. They are not employees. In fact, the only similarity they have with typical workers is that they receive a weekly paycheck. In all other regards, they are students.

The main reason they come here is to get an education. To help them financially, the University offers assistantships and tuition waivers.

Graduate students do not come here to be employed. Their weekly paycheck is a "stipend" which is much closer to a scholarship than a salary, especially since the primary factor that determines keeping or losing an assistantship is academic performance. School takes precedence over work.

However, if the GEO has its way, employment will become the focus of graduate activity. The GEO has worked very hard this semester to establish the right of graduate students to organize and form a labor union.

The administration maintains that they are prohibited by law from recognizing any single organization as the exclusive bargaining agent for graduate employees. They have offered to sign a formal written agreement on the terms of future negotiations.

The GEO, however, is determined to be represented by the United Auto Workers Union. The GEO has successfully negotiated and settled every issue except UAW representation, thus demonstrating the power of the GEO to improve conditions for graduate employees without being represented by the UAW.

William J. Leonard

Why must there be a union when the administration will negotiate directly with the GEO? A change as fundamental and far-reaching as the one the GEO has demanded must necessarily produce other changes as well. Some may be beneficial. Most would not.

Under the current system, graduate students are very lucky. Those with assistantships are educated for free. They pay only for a few services, and the state spends between $10,000-20,000 each year to educate them.

They are in almost complete control of their stipend. The only reasons for which they can lose it is total incompetence, negligence of duties, doing poorly academically or lack of funds.

Graduate students stand to lose much more than they would gain by unionizing.

Under this system, the emphasis is on education and academic performance, with teaching secondary. The GEO is suggesting that graduate students are employees first and students second. Members of the GEO should decide which of these they want emphasized: education or employment.

They are also urged to consider the consequences of unionization and to keep in mind that the issue is unionization, not representation or recognition.

The administration recognizes the need for representation; it recognizes the GEO as a representative of graduate students in negotiations; and graduate students are well-represented by the GEO.

The existing system is a good one and favorable to graduate students. There are ways of improving it without destroying it.

Murder convictions have color boundaries

On April 3, 1990 Charles Fryar Jr., a Black man, was convicted of first-degree murder for stabbing to death a White Springfield College student, Eric S. Palmer, during a heated confrontation on Pearl Street in Northampton between two White and Black groups a year ago.

Reggie Santiago

An all-White jury interpreted the few seconds that Fryar held the knife before fatally stabbing Palmer to be 'premeditated murder.' He was then ordered to serve life in prison without parole.

On April 3, 1990 premeditated murder was given new meaning. The word 'premeditated' itself was rendered useless.

As Fryar's attorney, David P. Hoose, told the Union-News, "I think the first-degree finding was completely unsupported by the evidence. I just find it hard to believe that there was premeditation there."

First-degree murder is "homicide committed by poison, lying in wait, and other killings committed in pursuance of a deliberate and premeditated design . . . "

Second-degree murder, on the other hand, is where "there is no deliberately formed design to take life . . . but where, nevertheless, there was a purpose to kill (or at least purpose to inflict the particular injury without caring whether it caused death or not) formed instantaneously in the mind, and where the killing was without justification or excuse . . ."

Manslaughter, which seems to be the only justifiable argument for Fryar's conviction, is the "unlawful taking of human life . . . committed upon a sudden heat of the passions; as if, upon a sudden quarrel, two persons fight and one of them kills the other . . ."

Manslaughter, moreover, does not entail life imprisonment.

Committing murder, already abhorrent in itself, is one thing. But being railroaded to carry a sentence that is heavier than the murderer deserves is questionable.

Color seems to play a key role in daily life, from the clothes we wear to the pen we write with. But sending a Black man to jail for the rest of his life while cases of White men who commit an equivalent crime suffer less (or not at all) isn't a simple issue of coordinated clothes or writing utensils.

Think for one minute of how frustrating it must be to know that, because the shade of your skin happens to be darker than that of the ones who wield power, you can rot in prison — while those of lighter skin can get away with spending so much less.

Assistant District Attorney William T. Walsh was exhilarated enough after hearing the decision to say, "All juries should be as intelligent as this one." Really?

Murder deserves the stiffest of punishments. But the punishment must also complement the gravity of the crime, not the emotions that understandably run high among those that sympathize with the victim.

In Black Reflections on White Power, Sterling Tucker comments, "In this land, the disease [of racism] has spread so far that few acknowledge it as disease, and even fewer recognize its existence. Yet, racism is everywhere. It is the nature of the system White Americans approve and accept. It operates in back, smoke-filled halls and in judicial chambers; it is in evidence when laws are written, when laws are enforced."

At the outset the Fryar murder conviction is the 'rightful' punishment of a wrongful act.

To delve deeper into it, however, is to realize that Fryar isn't the first Black to be handed a more severe conviction than evidence presents.

And he won't be the last.

The facade of diversity

The concept of diversity always seems to get a lot of attention — in the media, at universities, even here at the Collegian. I have to wonder if anyone actually knows what accepting diversity connotates.

Most people welcome "diversity" as long as it doesn't question their lifestyle or values. Many people say they like UMass because they meet many different people. But how much does the general population know about other cultures and histories?

Minu Sebastian

I would argue close to nothing. The interest just is not there. Most people take the easy way out and like to think they are open-minded and aware of other cultures simply because they have a few Black, Asian or Hispanic friends.

Much of the problem lies in the education system. Instead of teaching us how to understand others in terms different from our own, we are taught to assimilate them into our own thinking. Not only are we doing a gross injustice to other people, but we are also becoming oppressive and subjecting ourselves to this oppression without even being conscious of it.

Attempts to assimilate others into the American value system is not new to the United States. This is exactly how the United States rationalized stealing land from the Native Americans, "helping" Third World nations and imposing multinational corporations in South America.

People of these nations were considered uncivilized and in need of our technology and "knowledge." Unfortunately, cultures and people were lost and killed in the process. Imposing our economic system imposes our value system and culture on those who live a different lifestyle.

Many Americans have the arrogant attitude of thinking that other nations want and desire our material wealth. What these countries need is economic independence so they can preserve their culture and lifestyle.

With this kind of history and through our present dealings with other nations, how can we possibly expect to foster "diversity" in our own country?

We are living under the illusion of cultural awareness and acceptance.

Affirmative Action and "diversity" weeks are temporary solutions to a deep-rooted problem in the conceptualization of other people. Affirmative Action is necessary to avoid economic isolation of people, but it does not prevent social isolation. Diversity weeks promote awareness but they often fail to examine the institutionalized racism of our society.

"People of color" have been subjugated to the whims of a racist and ignorant society for too long. We have been told that we are lucky to be here and get jobs. The time has come for us to wake up and realize what is going on around us.

We need to find out about our histories and culture that has been denied through years of subjugation.

Other people need to look at their circle of friends. It is not enough to say that you have friends who are "people of color." In accepting them, are you devaluing them by only seeing them in your eyes, through your perspective? Have you ever asked them about where their ancestors are from or what their life is like not being White?

It is important to realize that there are people out there that are direct victims of histories of oppression and subjugation. And that today, we are still suffering from the past.

The United States has been built upon a history that was racist and oppressive. To deal with this reality, we need to accept others under their terms.

Until we can conceptualize others in terms different than our own, we will continue to live under the facade of cultural awareness and "diversity."

Letters to the Editor

Diversity corridor's existence threatened

Recently, the floor I live on has been threatened. Not by arson, leaks in the roof or vandals, but by Residential Education and Housing Services.

Residential Education established the Diversity corridor in Brett House "to provide an environment designed to educationally explore issues of diversity and cultural differences within our society." This happens only because we make it happen, not the Residential Education.

The corridor, located on the fourth floor, has been a major influence in my life and the lives of everyone who has ever lived there. It provides an education that this University is failing to give the majority: an education in social diversity.

I want more than just a degree in Engineering. I want an education.

This floor has also allowed me to live in a manner as I see fit, "devoid of peer pressure." But it is being threatened by an apathetic staff, who are themselves victims of bureaucracy.

Residential Education told us that they could not get us a table on the Campus Center concourse to advertise the floor, when in fact they could.

Housing Services also told us that there must be a 75 percent occupancy after the day for room choosing (April 19), a number chosen by a clearly bureaucratic mind when one considers that many junior and senior residents are already moving off campus next semester. This percentage also excludes new students and people who do not presently live in Brett House, and robs them of the chance to sign up should they be interested.

They have left the current residents to shoulder this recruitment job, yet making it hard for us to do so. They most likely think that, as long as no one knows about the floor, no one will sign up for it. Hence, they can get rid of it. We're hoping not to make it that easy for them.

It would truly be a shame to lose the community on fourth floor Brett, which itself has done much more than sit and watch.

Please feel welcome to attend the Diversity corridor's Information Session on April 17, Tuesday, at 6 p.m. in the Brett House main lounge.

Educate yourself and show your support!

Political cartoon weakens voice of campus

On Monday, April 9, I opened the Collegian to the Editorial page and was appalled and totally astonished that this paper had published an inappropriate and degrading cartoon created by Drew Aquilina, depicting three Physical Plant tradespeople as the underlying problem to the state's budget deficit.

This cartoonist is not informed with this state's situation if he thinks three state employees are the reason we have a budget deficit. "What's really behind the budget?" The legislators.

This type of finger-pointing attack on the classified working men and women of this campus and their union, Local 1776, is uncalled for. They did not create the state's $1 billion deficit, but this paper and Drew Aquilina feel the Physical Plant workers are expendable and the cause of the problem.

Classified men and women and their union supported the student body on this campus when you asked us to, rally after rally, strike after strike.

These same classified people were standing next to students and faculty at the Statehouse in support of higher education. We willingly wore arm bands to signify our support for your fight to establish a union for graduate students (GEO). The Physical Plant workers spoke in support of student issues at rallies. I testified to the House Ways and Means Committee in support of higher education and this campus and the contributions it has made along with its workforce.

The Collegian's willingness to publish Drew Aquilina's cartoon only helps to weaken the foundation that has been formed through the coalition of students, employees and faculty on campus.

Keep in mind that UMass state employees live, work and pay taxes in this state. Many of their children are enrolled here. We are involved in the same battle. Your voice alone in Boston is the voice of students. Together, we are the voice of a campus.

I say to you, Drew Aquilina, where will you be on April 12, at noon? Standing on the steps of the Statehouse with the AFSCME union employees to show your support for higher education and your campus?

Or wasting good ink on another derogatory cartoon?

Criminal activities outrage Greek Area staff

We, the staff of the Office of Greek Affairs, are writing to express our surprise, frustration and anger with the individual(s) responsible for vandalizing the Greek Area Government office last week.

Greek Area officers take their roles and responsibilities very seriously and have committed themselves to helping the Greek Area progress to a higher level. Last week's action, for whatever reason, is totally inappropriate and unacceptable. We suspect that for a few brief moments the individual(s) felt a surge of power and satisfaction in making a statement. That behavior represented a criminal offense — breaking and entering and theft.

Our collective sentiment is that little or nothing is ever accomplished by destroying something or someone. There are serious consquences for criminal behavior and it is our hope that when caught, the individual(s) receive the maximum sanction.

We are outraged, and we ask the campus community to condemn such behavior and to lend support to our commitment to making the Greek Area the best it can be.

Skilled workers insulted over harsh illustration

In the April 9 Collegian, there was yet another cartoon of three UMass Physical Plant workers portrayed as lazy idiots.

All in good fun I'm sure, but particularly in these times, your use of this stereotype is insulting to the majority of the plant workers who are working harder under increasingly depressing conditions. It is not easy to notice a service provider while everything is going pretty well.

For example, the fire last week in a trash room in Gorman that wiped out the central fire alarm system: did anyone on your reporting staff notice that the very next night there was a fire in a room in Gorman and the entire building was evacuated by the central alarm system? How do you suppose that alarm worked?

As often occurs here, some skilled and dedicated people worked through the night until there was a working system. Sometime (soon, if conditions persist) there may not be enough trained technicians to do that, or to keep the systems in Campus Center running so that you can practice your craft in the Collegian offices.

I bet you'll notice then.

"Why Should I Register ...
... For PUBLIC HEALTH 216?

(Peer Health promotion program)

Let Me Count The Whys.

1. I can earn three academic credits.
2. It can help me to meet lots of people.
3. It can help me to improve areas of my own health.
4. It can improve my chances of getting a job, because I will represent the University Health Services.
5. It will teach me skills valuable in any career like leading a workshop, giving a presentation and developing marketing strategies.
6. It can really help me be part of a team working to improve UMass.
7. It will teach me about important public health issues like sexually transmitted diseases and AIDS, cardiovascular illness, eating disorders, cancer, accident prevention, stress and consumer health.
8. In short, it might be the most important course I take while I'm a student at UMass.

If you are a creative and motivated student, pre-register now or call the Health Education Division, 549-2671 Ext. 181 for more information.

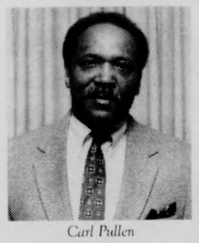
Class will meet Tuesdays and Thursdays 2:30 pm - 3:45 pm. There will be a Saturday training in September.

Earn a Free Master's Degree

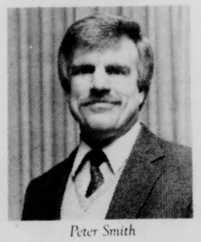
The UB Substitute Teacher/Internship Program offers a unique opportunity for individuals interested in making an important career move into the teaching profession.

"As a former business production manager, I'm able to combine good organizational skills with the parental experience which comes from raising my own family. Through the Internship Program, I achieved my original career goal of becoming a teacher."—Peter Smith

"Having been a law enforcement officer, I bring to the classroom a wealth of experience. In my career as an educator, I'll now make good use of my knowledge and interpersonal skills to educate our youth."—Carl Pullen



Carl Pullen



Peter Smith

You, too, can earn a Master's Degree or Sixth Year in Education—and if desired, Teacher Certification—including full tuition remission for 33 credits, $2,500 for expenses and valuable experience.

This is the first program of its kind in the country. Since its inception in 1981, hundreds of people who have successfully completed the Internship Program have secured excellent placement opportunities.

You can also earn your graduate degree in other academic areas—Counseling, School Psychology and Music or Art Education—as long as you qualify for these programs.

You will be placed as a full-time substitute teacher in the Ansonia, Bethlehem, Bridgeport, Danbury, Darien, Fairfield, Greenwich, Hamden, Woodbury, New Haven, Norwalk, Shelton, Newtown, Stamford, Wilton, Middlebury, Southbury, Weston, Trumbull, North Branford, Thomaston, Brookfield, or Derby school systems.

Best of all, you could be interviewing for jobs this time next year. For more information call Dr. Louise Soares at (203) 576-4193.

Application deadline for Fall Semester is June 15, 1990.

Yes, I'm interested in the Substitute Teacher/Internship Program.

Supertrio to conclude Magic Triangle series

By BILL ROSENBLATT
Collegian Staff

The Magic Triangle jazz concert series concludes a week from tonight, and WMUA, Residential Arts and UPC have definitely saved the best for last. The group that will perform at Hampden Theatre in Southwest a week from tonight consists of three masters of the music — saxophonist Clifford Jordan, bassist Cecil McBee and drummer Roy Haynes — a true supergroup.

All three of these musicians have been vital contributors to the jazz tradition. They were born within a period of ten years, and represent three different eras of innovation.

Boston born Roy Haynes, the oldest of the three, is a contemporary of Max Roach and, like Roach, is an elder statesman of jazz drumming. Although his original influence was Jo Jones of the Count Basie band, he participated in the bebop revolution in the late 40s along with Bird, Miles, Monk and the like.

Valley Jazz

Haynes was not one to be left behind as the music moved further ahead. After a five-year stint with Sarah Vaughan, he played in John Coltrane's early 60s quartet and worked as a sideman with Eric Dolphy and Oliver Nelson. Since then he has been one of the most in-demand drummers in jazz.

Although only five years older than Haynes, Clifford Jordan didn't make his mark until the late 50s, when he played hard-bop with Horace Silver and J.J. Johnson. After subsequent stints with Roach, Charles Mingus and Kenny Dorham, he founded Frontier records, one of a few independent jazz labels that appeared in the late 60s. On that label, he recorded with such avant-garde pioneers as Pharoah Sanders and Charles Brackeen.

Jordan spent much of the 70s as a teacher. More recently, he has become involved with more traditionally-minded musicians like Barry Harris, Tommy Flanagan and Art Farmer. His most recent recorded appearance is on Carmen McRae's Carmen Sings Monk album. He is the perfect example of a musician who started out within the tradition, explored its outer limits, and took what he learned back into the tradition again.

Cecil McBee, on the other hand, is more closely associated with the advanced music of the 60s and 70s. He was one of the most prolific bassists on the influential Blue Note recordings of the late 60s under such leaders as Wayne Shorter and Jackie McLean. His place in the avant-garde pantheon was assured in the early 70s when he appeared on several Pharoah Sanders albums.

Later in the 70s, McBee recorded extensively with Chico Freeman, who at the time was considered one of the most promising young saxophonists. His most important recent association has been with the avant-garde supergroup The Leaders, along with Freeman, Lester Bowie, Arthur Blythe and others.

The Haynes/Jordan/McBee concert is a golden opportunity to see world class musicians in an intimate setting and at a low price. Advance tickets for Thursday's show are available at the Fine Arts Center box office. Judging from the response to the first two Magic Triangle shows, this one should sell out fast, so get 'em while you can.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Give in to a creative or adventurous urge. Clients are willing to pay top dollar for original ideas. Share health-oriented activities with family. Finalize your social plans for the weekend.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Practicality is the key to making lasting financial gains. Exercise greater self-discipline. New avenues open up where your career is concerned. Partnerships are in the limelight. Get all promises in writing.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A morning disclosure could be upsetting. Seek a lawyer's advice if you have doubts about a contract or agreement. Welcome new responsibilities; they could bring more pay or greater public recognition.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A social event may not live up to your expectations. Welcome a unique opportunity to mix business with pleasure. You need to avoid going to extremes where spending or eating is concerned.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Some early-morning confusion is possible. Your loved ones' cooperation soon sets things right. A next-door neighbor could speak to you about a delicate matter. Be discreet. Keep your own counsel.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A phone call lifts your spirits early today. Romance is favored. Try to get more exercise. Mate gives you the strength to make the right decision. Your children will agree with your choice.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your intuition could be playing tricks on you. Do not bank on hunches. Postpone making an important decision until you have a chance to talk with others face-to-face. Your finances improve.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Welcome new information abut a longtime situation. You can bury the past. A meeting with someone influential gives you food for thought. Teamwork will improve the bottom line. Move swiftly.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A "red letter" day for your personal relationships. Someone who talks your language has great romantic appeal. Plan entertainment that is both fun and inexpensive.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A conflict between home and work must be resolved. A neighbor offers to baby-sit in an emergency. Do something special for this thoughtful friend.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A day full of surprises! New projects get under way. Give credit where it is due and you will make a lifelong friend. Someone with special gifts comes to your rescue in an emergency.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20): Make this a productive day. Original ideas count big with the powers that be. Others look to you for leadership. A get-together with friends will prove both fun and relaxing this evening.

The second and third liners saw most of the play in the second half, many getting their first chances to strut their stuff.

Freshman attack Mark Millon had three goals, including a strange one with 12 seconds left in the first half when PC's Bob Murphy tossed the ball in his own net. Millon was the "in-home" player (first player on the field listed in the scorebook) and got the credit for the goal.

Sophomore Mike Cain also added three goals, while junior Jim McAleavey (four assists) and seniors Rob Codignotto and Tim Soudan each had two.

"The second line of Millon, Cain and [Bill] Begien popped 'em in. They got things rolling," Garber said.

Others hitting for UMass were seniors Scott Hiller and Jamie Bergan, juniors Begien, Rich Senatore and Frank Pepe, sophomores John Schlipf and Rob Falvey and freshman Mario Guaglianone.

Sharing the net duties were junior Ted Kellerman (five saves), sophomore Ray Suris (nine) and freshman Todd Ackerman (seven). Suris stood out with a series of four saves in the second quarter when Kellerman was called for a one-minute penalty for accidently throwing his stick to stop a shot from going in.

a 5-1 win over Connecticut and a 9-0 thrashing of Fairfield in which they didn't drop a set.

"They're tough all the way through," Roberts said. "The match will definitely be decided in doubles."

Like UMass, Hartford is a young team (only two upperclassmen) and is well-coached. First-year coach Kirk Pearson was named North Atlantic Conference Coach-of-the-Year for his fall season efforts.

Gorilla barrage too much for Providence

Thirteen score for UMass in 20-3 pounding of Friars

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

For all intents and purposes, this one was over when it was scheduled.

With the Big East Conference planning to move beyond the glitz and hype of basketball and into the world of men's lacrosse, Providence College figured it would have to warm itself up with some tough opposition before entering the fray.

Welcome to the big time, guys.

The Friars came north yesterday to face the University of Massachusetts for the first time ever yesterday, and they may not ever want to come back after the Gorillas roared to a 20-3 pounding of their guests at chilly Boyden Field.

For UMass, this was little more than an organized practice before Saturday's tilt with second-ranked Yale at The Hill.

"It gave us a chance for a lot of kids to play who haven't played yet," said UMass coach Dick Garber. "I told them to run our plays and not go haywire 1-on-1."

The Gorillas still managed to go a little bonkers on offense, scoring 20 or more for the fourth time in six outings. Thirteen different UM players found the net.

UMass jumped out to a 4-0 lead before Providence struck on a man-up goal by Ed Loiselle late in the first quarter. But UMass scored nine straight, seven in the second quarter that made it 11-1 at the half.

Gazelles barred by Brown Bruins, 15-1

By ADRIENNE MATT
Collegian Staff

It's okay, you can look bewildered.

There were a lot of sparks but no ignition as the University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team lost 15-1 to the Brown University Bruins.

"We were a second late every time," said head coach Patti Bossio. "We had some great opportunities but we kept turning the ball over and Brown was all over us."

To try to put some sense of perspective into this game, the Gazelles were trailing 3-1 with 14 minutes left in the first half. By the end of the half, however, the score was upped to 6-1.

"We couldn't get anything going on offense," Bossio said. "They couldn't penetrate the crease so they were driving from the top."

Freshman Rachael Splaine scored the Gazelles' only goal, unassisted. She currently has nine goals and one assist. Regardless of the results, junior Karen Pierce had a great game (17 saves), said Bossio.

"Something was missing," she said. "It was obvious in warm up. We were tired."

After such an impressive game against Boston College Tuesday, it's difficult to believe the Gazelles missed eight free positions and lost most of the draws.

"We couldn't move," Bossio said. "We were so focused at Boston College . . . .

"We got into a running game," she said. "We weren't quick enough to counterattack."

The Bruins stepped into the game with a 5-1 record. Junior Roselin Wilenzik had 10 saves for the game.

Hot sticks included junior Suzanne Bailey (four goals), junior Pamela Novia (four), freshman Melanie Bartol (three), sophomore Samantha Fahnestock (two), junior Siri Lindley (one) and junior Perry Moreiarty (1 goal, 6 assists).

Excepting the first draw, the Gazelles weren't in the game at all: "On man-down situations, we were always a step late," Bossio said.

"It's difficult to come from behind," she said. "We didn't see that light at the end of the tunnel."

Baseball blasts Boston Univ., 8-0

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

We won't know just how big a win this was for the University of Massachusetts baseball team until the end of the weekend when the team concludes its grueling eight games in its five-day schedule.

But for now, yesterday's 8-0 shutout of Boston University is a big win for the Minutemen.

The Minutemen are in a part of the schedule which could either make or break them for the season. The tough eight-game week started with a disappointing 8-7 loss to the Huskies of UConn. Yesterday at Lorden Field, the Minutemen redeemed themselves thanks in large part to freshman Daryle Corriveau who won his first collegiate game. Corriveau was sensational, allowing just six hits and striking out 12 Terrier hitters, in a masterful complete game shutout.

Corriveau's ability to go the distance will be a key factor for the remainder of the week. After using four pitchers Tuesday, coach Mike Stone needed a complete game from Corriveau, and he got it. Corriveau improved his record to 1-3, while the Minutemen moved over the .500 mark at 10-9.

The Minutemen gave Corriveau all the runs he would need in the first inning, when they came up with a three spot. Derek Dana doubled home Drew Comeau for the third UMass run while the other runs scored on sloppy play by the Terriers (wild pitch). Steve Corradi who replaced Glenn DiSarcina at shortstop for the second straight game had three hits, including two triples. Comeau also ended the day with three hits as the Minutemen rolled over BU.

Today the University of New Hampshire visits Lorden Field for two games beginning at 1 p.m.

Notes: Mike Tobin continues to lead the team in hitting with a .418 average, while Lou Olivieri is second at .405.

Scott Meaney and Jerry Creamer are the only two pitchers who have ERAs under three. Creamer has four saves and Meaney is 3-0.

Men's tennis faces Hartford

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Correspondent

After a relatively easy 5-1 win over Rhode Island Monday, the University of Massachusetts men's tennis team faces a much stronger test from Hartford today at 3 p.m. at the Upper Boyden Courts.

"It's gonna be a blood and guts match for sure. [Hartford] is strong at all six singles and good at all three doubles," said UMass coach Manny Roberts, noting that the match would probably be "real close."

Of course, UMass isn't about to let the Hawks walk in and win. The Minutemen have won seven straight matches dating back to the fall season, during which they have defeated this same Hartford squad.

Hartford may have one advantage in that it has played far more matches than UMass. The Hawks (6-3) went 3-2 during a spring break trip to Florida, and were riding a five-match winning streak until a 5-1 loss to Bloomsburg University (Pa.) on Sunday.

Their local wins include a 5-4 sinking of Coast Guard,

Softball gears up for test vs. UConn

Minutewomen put home win streak on line against Huskies

By DAN SARAZEN
Collegian Staff

They have the hitting from the likes of Holly Aprile (.397), Jen Miller (.351), Mary Duff (.339) and Cherie DellAnno (15 RBI's). They have the pitching in the right arm of Aprile (a 1.95 ERA). And the University of Massachusetts softball team (10-12) has stolen 20 bases out of 22 attempts, so they have speed.

Last week Aprile (the 'e' is silent this season) was the Atlantic 10 Pitcher-of-the-Week (if she keeps pitching like this she can pronounce it anyway she wants), and Miller completed the sweep as she was named the A-10 Player-of-the-Week.

What more could the Minutewomen want? FANS!

UMass opened up its home season last Thursday by sweeping Hartford and despite the fact that they are reigning A-10 Champions AND despite the fact that they had won their last 19 regular season home games (now 21), there were fewer that 40 fans at the game and many of them were for the visiting Hartford team.

There's little to a home field advantage if you don't have your fair share of fans.

Today the Minutewomen face their toughest challenge of the young season as they face the Connecticut Huskies in a doubleheader at Totman Field, 3 p.m., and a large following of UMass fans could tip the odds in favor of the home team.

The Huskies are 20-2, ranked 18th in the nation and first in the New England region, and led by the pitching of Sue (I'd like to buy a vowel) Rybczyk, who is 9-1 with a 0.49 ERA (that's not a typo) and can also hit with a .375 avgerage (15 RBIs).

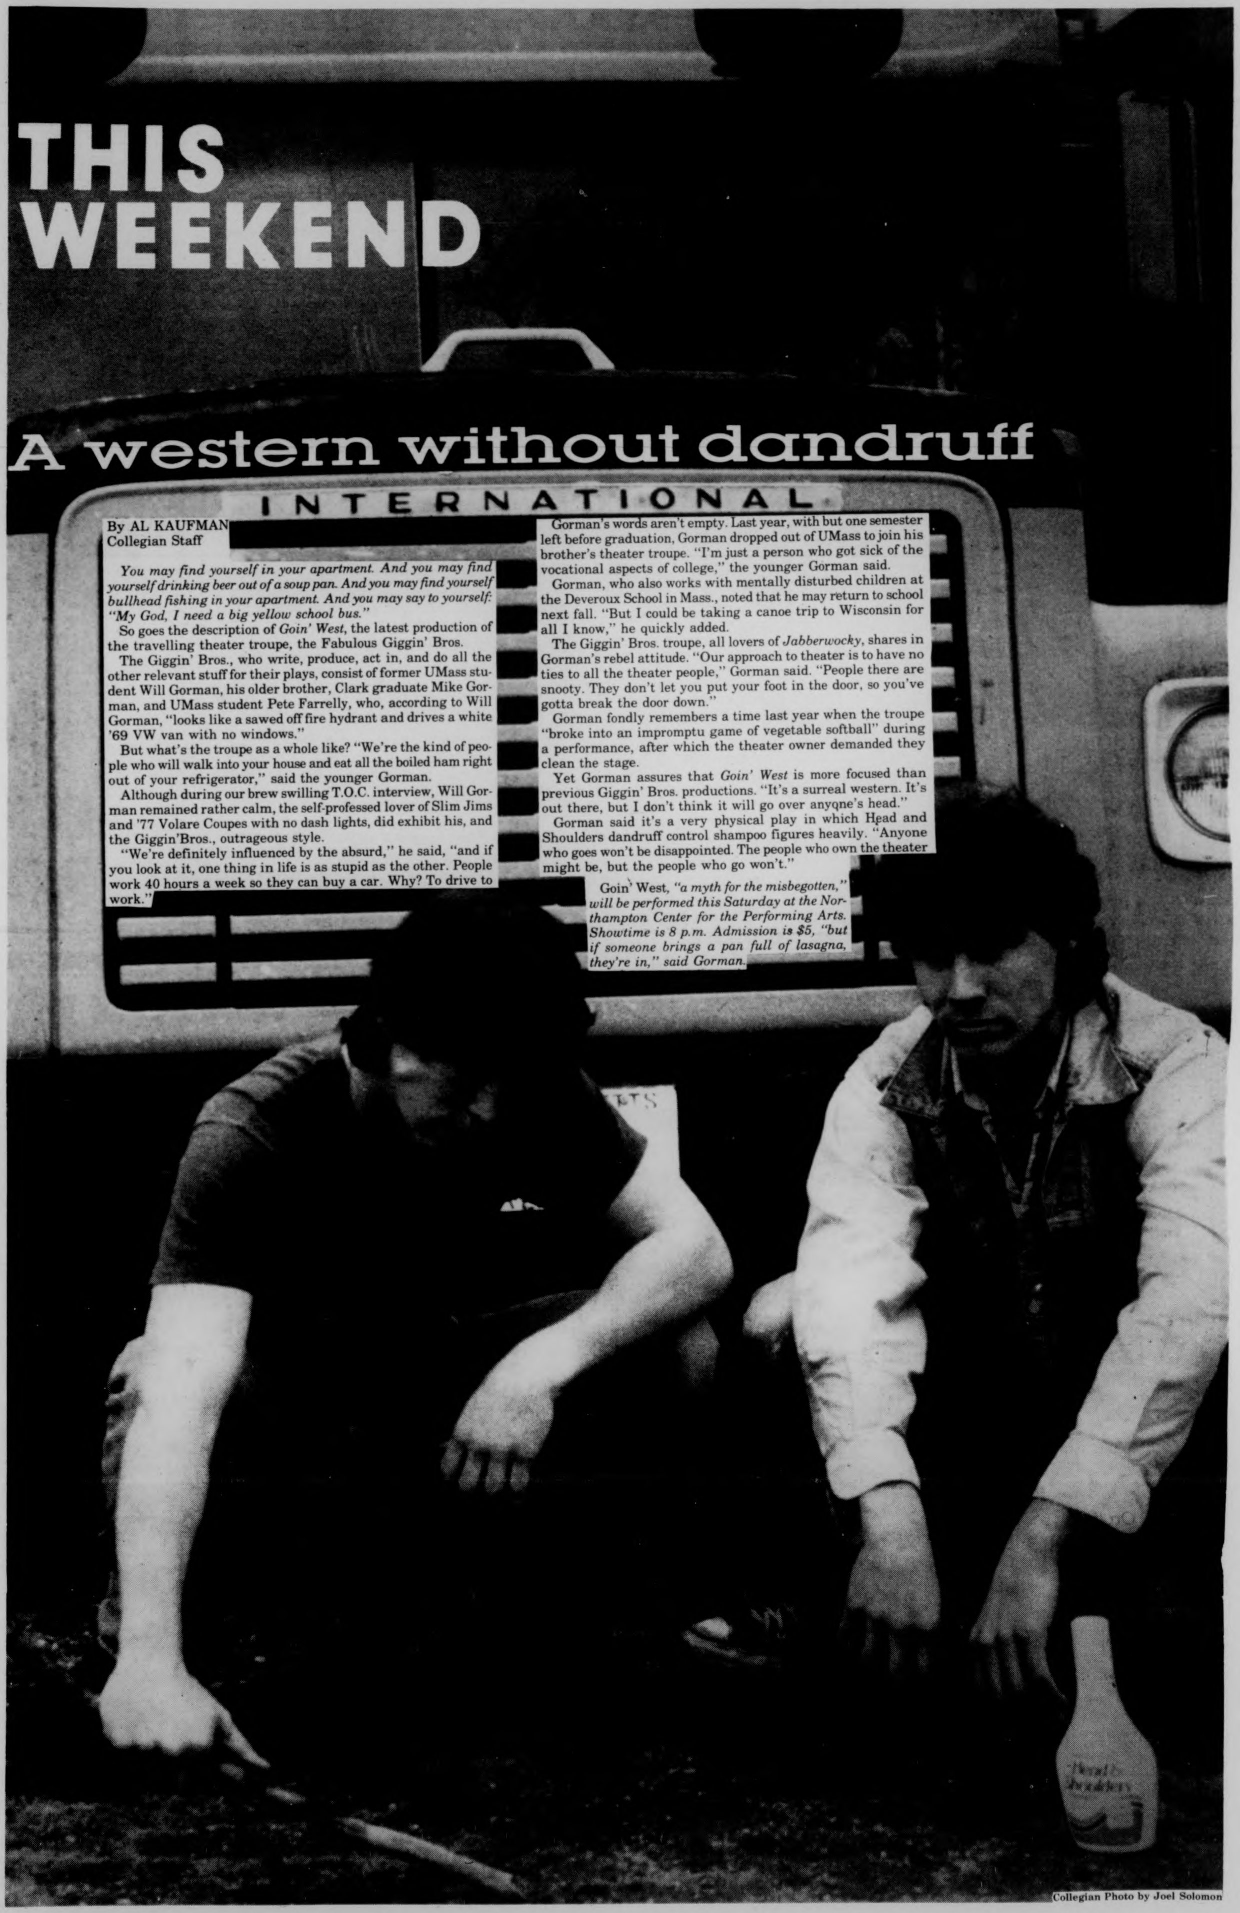
The second Huskie pitcher will probably be Kim Mizesko. Mizesko also sports a 9-1 record and an impressive 1.42 ERA.

Now the question comes down to: What are you prepared to do? Let me give you some suggestions:

First, get there early. It will be a sunny day ???????hair; The stands at Totman can only accommodate about 100 fans and there should surely be more than that for today's game.

And finally, bring something to drink (non-alcoholic). Good fans are not only seen, they are also heard and you will need to keep your voice in shape.

UConn will be a battle for the Minutewomen, but good teams are forced to face challenges. It goes with the territory. UMass will play on its home field and there should be plenty of fans present to offer support. It goes with the territory.



THIS WEEKEND

A western without dandruff

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian Staff

You may find yourself in your apartment. And you may find yourself drinking beer out of a soup pan. And you may find yourself bullhead fishing in your apartment. And you may say to yourself: "My God, I need a big yellow school bus."

So goes the description of Goin' West, the latest production of the travelling theater troupe, the Fabulous Giggin' Bros.

The Giggin' Bros., who write, produce, act in, and do all the other relevant stuff for their plays, consist of former UMass student Will Gorman, his older brother, Clark graduate Mike Gorman, and UMass student Pete Farrelly, who, according to Will Gorman, "looks like a sawed off fire hydrant and drives a white '69 VW van with no windows."

But what's the troupe as a whole like? "We're the kind of people who will walk into your house and eat all the boiled ham right out of your refrigerator," said the younger Gorman.

Although during our brew swilling T.O.C. interview, Will Gorman remained rather calm, the self-professed lover of Slim Jims and '77 Volare Coupes with no dash lights, did exhibit his, and the Giggin'Bros., outrageous style.

"We're definitely influenced by the absurd," he said, "and if you look at it, one thing in life is as stupid as the other. People work 40 hours a week so they can buy a car. Why? To drive to work."

Gorman's words aren't empty. Last year, with but one semester left before graduation, Gorman dropped out of UMass to join his brother's theater troupe. "I'm just a person who got sick of the vocational aspects of college," the younger Gorman said.

Gorman, who also works with mentally disturbed children at the Deveroux School in Mass., noted that he may return to school next fall. "But I could be taking a canoe trip to Wisconsin for all I know," he quickly added.

The Giggin' Bros. troupe, all lovers of Jabberwocky, shares in Gorman's rebel attitude. "Our approach to theater is to have no ties to all the theater people," Gorman said. "People there are snooty. They don't let you put your foot in the door, so you've gotta break the door down."

Gorman fondly remembers a time last year when the troupe "broke into an impromptu game of vegetable softball" during a performance, after which the theater owner demanded they clean the stage.

Yet Gorman assures that Goin' West is more focused than previous Giggin' Bros. productions. "It's a surreal western. It's out there, but I don't think it will go over anyone's head."

Gorman said it's a very physical play in which Head and Shoulders dandruff control shampoo figures heavily. "Anyone who goes won't be disappointed. The people who own the theater might be, but the people who go won't."

Goin' West, "a myth for the misbegotten," will be performed this Saturday at the Northampton Center for the Performing Arts. Showtime is 8 p.m. Admission is $5, "but if someone brings a pan full of lasagna, they're in," said Gorman.

Siberry shatters pop boundaries

On April 15 and 16, Canadian singer/songwriter Jane Siberry will be performing at the Iron Horse.

Following the release of her major label debut, No Borders Here, in 1984, which included the eclectic single "Mimi On the Beach," Siberry established herself a solid reputation as both performer and songwriter. Early parallels were drawn between her music and that of of Kate Bush and Laurie Anderson.

Her voice has as wide a range as Bush's, but her songs are often as playful and off-the-wall as Anderson's, as the "The Waitress" from No Borders Here can attest to. Yet just as quickly, Siberry could go off into the mystical magic of songs like "Map of the World (pt. 1)."

Siberry took the international world by storm in 1988, following up the release of The Walking, her fourth album, with her first-ever live appearances in Europe and Great Britain.

She was also a major success at at the 1988 UMass Spring Pond Concert, where she opened for Robert Cray and the Alarm.

Siberry is currently touring in support of her album, Bound by the Beauty.

Jane Siberry plays the Iron Horse this Sunday and Monday night. Shows begin at 7 p.m. and 10 p.m. Tickets for all four shows are $16.

7,000 participate in Boston rally

BOSTON — Seven thousand students, faculty, and staff from 26 state universities and colleges flooded the streets of Boston yesterday as they entreated their legislators to stop cuts to state public higher education institutions in Massachusetts.

Yesterday was the second of two days of action devoted to protesting consistent increases to tuition and fees these institutions have suffered over the past year.

About 150 security personnel from the University of Lowell, Framingham State College, and the University of Massachusetts at Amherst were on hand to ensure the safety of the Statehouse grounds.

Jake Burke, senior from ULowell said, "We're here to tell people to back off a little if they get out of hand."

But they did not get out of hand, and the morning hours saw about 105 buses of students unloading on the Boston Common under sunny skies. They were greeted by the Salem band "Boy's Will," who grabbed the attention of the protestors and encouraged them to "keep the fight going long past the end of the day."

Some 30 students from the Amherst campus arrived around 9 a.m. to lobby legislators. Many of the the representatives and senators were unavailable and aides in most cases addressed the lobbyists.

By noon energy was high among the crowd, and with voices echoing off of Boston office buildings, the 7,000 students marched up Beacon Street, around the Statehouse and returned to the Common chanting, "No More Cuts."

Windows of the Statehouse filled with visages of men and women with arms folded, and business people stopped in their paths curious about why "all these kids were out of their classes."

Several speakers addressed the crowd upon returning to the Common. All stressed that the elections for state officials in November was the most vital way students are able to convey their displeasure with the current legislative system.

Representatives from MASSPIRG registered 325 voters throughout the day.

Dave Varela, president of the Framingham State Student Government Association began organizing the two days of action in January. He addressed the crowd upon returning to the Common.

"We are far stronger now, we are maturing politically and adversity has made us stronger," he said. "While the administration fiddles under the golden dome [Statehouse] we have been acting and a sleeping giant has been awakened."

Jim Braude of the Tax Equity Alliance of Massachusetts said, "We are not Iowa: we do not have rich topsoil. We are not Texas: we do not have rich oil fields. We are squandering the one critical natural resource we have: our young people's minds."

Students spurred to action by cuts

• Lobbyists, politicians meet

By REGGIE SANTIAGO
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — Thirty students from the University of Massachusetts at Amherst met with various state representatives yesterday to lobby against further cuts in the public higher education budget.

The lobbyists met with representatives or their aides at the Statehouse for about two hours, before the arrival of rallying students from all over the state.

"We can't magically cut our way out of this mess," said Rep. Michael P. Walsh (D-Agawam), addressing the problem of the 2.3 billion dollar deficit that the state now faces.

He reaffirmed his support for public higher education, but remained undecided whether an increase in general taxes would significantly alleviate the problem. Walsh warned that although a fair, reasonable and equitable increase in taxes is needed, "ultimately we're going to have to cut somewhere."

Rep. Carol C. Cleven (R-Chelmsford) voted to increase fees and tuition in Massachusetts state schools and said that she did so "to safeguard public higher education."

• State students express anger

By PETER LEON
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — Students from North Adams State College, Bristol Community College, Bridgewater State College and many other schools expressed their discontent and disillusionment with the state of higher education at the rally in Boston yesterday.

Ron Alman, a member of the Massachusetts Board of Regents of Higher Education, told the crowd gathered on the Boston Common that the state education budget has been cut by nine percent in the last two years, and is the only state in the Union to have cut its education budget in that time period.

Karen Shea, a sophomore at the University of Lowell, said that the budget cuts have caused sparse conditions at her school. "They cut lighting and heat in the dorms and classrooms, as well as classes themselves," she said, adding that the University has gone as far as removing every other lightbulb in classrooms to save electricity costs.

Hampshire students demand college divests from holdings

By LISA SHAPIRO
Collegian Staff

Students at Hampshire College yesterday called for the college to divest nearly $250,000 from corporations involved in military projects that they claim violate the college's investment policy.

Four Hampshire College students, who are affiliated with People for a Socially Responsible University, called for the college to divest the objectionable holdings, which account for about four percent of the college's total investments, by April 19, or "appropriate action" may be taken.

Citing the college's December 1989 stock portfolio, the students said they believe holdings in TRW, Chrysler Corp., Amoco, Ford Motor Co., Harris Co., and IBM, violate the policy because the corporations are involved in military projects, including work with MX missiles, Inter-Continental Ballistic Missiles, fighter planes and other weapons systems.

According to Hampshire's 'Guidelines for Responsible Investments,' the college "does not wish to profit from, not appear to support or endorse by holding equity securities in, corporations which cause social injury."

Those corporations which "cause social injury" include those that "have operations in South Africa or engage in the production or sale of components and technologies for nuclear warheads," according to the policy.

Faculty hiring freeze continues

A 10-day old freeze on faculty recruitment was extended indefinitely yesterday after a scheduled review by the University of Massachusetts administration.

Through the Early Retirement Program, 32 new vacancies were created this year; however, 17 of those vacancies will not be filled, Provost Richard O'Brien said.

The decision came after discussions earlier this week with the Faculty Senate Ad Hoc Budget Advisory Committee and the deans, O'Brien said.

The faculty cutbacks will account for $1 million of the $1.25 million budget shortfall in academic affairs expected for next year, with the rest to go as a deficit spread among the colleges, O'Brien said.

"This is not very revolutionary budget cutting, but even one more reduction will most likely have a negative effect," O'Brien said.

Sara Lennox, vice president of the Massachusetts Society of Professors and professor in the German department was disappointed with the outcome.

"This intensifies the problems we are already facing and its very detrimental to the students' education,' she said.

Lennox said a tax increase is the best solution along with a "commitment from the commonwealth" to fund public higher education.

investment responsibility, Cora Weiss, said students may have a "perfectly reasonable complaint and may be much closer to the situation [than the board.]"

"This may be an oversight where a broker did not adhere stringently to the policy," she said. "We are a board very committed to social responsibility. I'm sure it will work out fine."

The students, who began researching the college's stock purchases one month ago, also requested that the college amend its policy to prohibit the investment of college money in corporations involved in research, development or sale of weapons systems.

Students blamed the alleged violations on negligence by the college and its Boston stock management firm, Standish Ayre & Wood. Austin Smith, manager of the Hampshire College account, could not be reached for comment.

Additionally, students requested equal input in the investment purchasing decisions, currently made by the management firm and advised by the Hampshire College board of trustees.

Student Mayyasa Al-Malazi said the PSRU is prepared to help find alternate corporations to invest in. Other suggestions were to invest in money market funds and credit unions.

Student Damon Bean said that money invested in these corporations "is a part of Hampshire College."

"We become a part of that corporation," he said. "It is a bad thing if they are socially irresponsible." The students said IBM sells products in South Africa and asked whether that constitutes "operation" of a company, as the guideline states.

A public forum, titled "The Five College Coalition on Responsible Investments" will be held at 11 a.m. Saturday in the conference room of Blair Hall at Hampshire College.

Christian communities celebrate Easter

By DARREN GARNICK
Collegian Staff

Easter means more than jelly beans, frilly dresses and peanut butter eggs, local Christian leaders said yesterday.

The Rev. J. Joseph Quigley, director of the Newman Center at the University of Massachusetts, said Easter is a celebration of life. "The heart of Catholicism is life," he said. "Our most precious gift is to be alive."

"There are so many pessimists around today," Quigley said. "So many people down in the dumps. Cancer, AIDS and nuclear weapons scare the daylights out of people. Easter's got a terrific message."

Yesterday, Christians observed Holy Thursday, the day they believe Jesus was crucified. According to the New Testament, Jesus was buried the next day, Good Friday, and was resurrected from the dead on Easter Sunday.

Quigley said the death and resurrection of Jesus means that people should no longer fear death because they too will live forever if they follow his teachings.

"Jesus rose from the dead and said death will no longer be a threat to you," he said. "If you follow [Jesus'] directions, you will never die. As [Jesus] rose from the dead, so will you."

Quigley said according to Catholic theology, the human spirit lives on after physical death, and the physical body will be resurrected at Armageddon.

Julie Bergdahl, a pastoral intern at the Immanuel Lutheran Church on North Pleasant Street, said Lutherans believe Good Friday and Easter affirm that "Jesus' life is where our life begins.

"Jesus' victory was won on the cross in death and suffering," she said. "The real victory is that death is no more."

Bergdahl said many people ignore their spiritual side when they seek self-improvement.

"People are looking for wellness through aerobics class and eating oat bran," Bergdahl said. "People are looking for wellness there, but are they really finding it?

"You can exercise until you drop and eat the best diet, but that still doesn't prevent us from suffering or dying," she said. "It is not up to us to save ourselves. Instead of trying to overcome death by good health habits, we can accept it."

But Bergdahl said sometimes Easter's message of eternal life is muddled by commercialism.

"A chocolate egg doesn't really bring wholeness to someone who just lost a loved one or went through a divorce," she said.

Brian Abasciano, a UMass sophomore history major and member of the Campus Crusade for Christ, echoed Bergdahl's sentiments.

"With all the commercialism it seems like everyone celebrates Easter, but a lot of [Americans] just buy stuff," he said. "It doesn't have much meaning for people. They don't know Christ. They don't care about him."

However, Quigley said the Easter Bunny enhances the holiday.

"I don't see it as a threat," he said. "The kids get a big kick out of it and have a lot of fun."

Media portrayal of women oppressive, exploitative

By DIANE HICKS
Collegian Staff

Strategies for dealing with oppressive media images of women were put forth last night at Amherst College's Chapman House.

Jessica Cates, Diana Selig, and Laurie Hill, Educator Advocates with the University of Massachusetts Everywoman's Center, led a discussion of the media's portrayal of women, the affects of sex-role stereotyping, as well as the exploitation of women through violent and sexual images in the media.

With regard to dealing with exploitive media, Cates said, "I think writing letters is helpful, or even speaking out." She added that it is sometimes easier for people to write letters than to vocalize their feelings on this matter.

It was the general consensus of those present last night that it is difficult to express feelings of the media's oppression of women; those who can not comprehend the process often trivialize the messages and images of advertisements.

Therese Dooley, a UMass student, noted a difference in the perspectives of men and women in viewing the media. She pointed out that even intelligent, educated people often succumb to sex-role stereotypes.

On the other hand, Dooley was optimistic in what can be done to stop the sexual exploitation of and violence against women in advertisements.

She noted a poster campaign to boycott Guess jeans as one effective way of fighting the media's portrayal of women. The posters, which reprint Guess ads depicting women in violent and sexual situations, have reply cards attached for people to send Guess in protest.

Dooley noted the advantage of our society is that the consumers may determine a great deal through their buying behavior. She said, "if we can educate each other not to buy these products then we can stop [oppressive advertising]."

Consequently, Cates said, "the advertisers have such a powerful position. It's frightening that television shows are just made for the advertisements."

The price of Ms. magazine would escalate to seven or eight dollars per issue if ads were taken out, Cates said.

BOG split over election results

Carvalho ousted; says Board is now a "political tool"

The Board of Governors' meeting transformed into a bitter feud last night after election results for new officers polarized the Board into two halves.

After BOG Chairperson Sue Gordon ran uncontested for her seat and was unanimously re-elected, Heather Tupper and Tracy Sliwa withdrew their nominations for vice-chair, leaving Gov. Ed Corrigan the sole heir to the position.

Then came the face-off for treasurer between incumbent Garron Carvalho and Gov. Mary Noone, who just began her term as Central Residental Area's representative three weeks ago. After Noone edged Carvalho out 11 to 10, the split Board exploded into an uproar.

Before the secret ballot election for treasurer, the Board discussed the merits of each candidate with Carvalho and Noone outside the room. Carvalho supporters cited his experience as treasurer, his ability to work well under pressure, his knowledge of the budget and his commitment to the BOG.

Tupper said Noone had an enthusiastic attitude, but was too inexperienced to handle the current budget crisis with the Student Government Association and the Graduate Student Senate.

Noone supporters, led by Gov. Bill Hewitt, said Noone's enthusiasm would give the BOG a badly needed boost.

"When you see ambition, you harness it," said Hewitt, who added he had no complaints with Carvalho's performance in office.

After the election for treasurer, several governors said they were "disgusted" Carvalho was ousted from office, charging that people voted against him for political reasons instead of judging him on his financial skills.

"I'd hope you'd vote for any elected official based on merit, not their zealousness," said Gov. Beth Dacey.

Near the end of the meeting, Carvalho said he regretted he was the focus of debate. "The Board is not a political tool to set your own agenda," he said. "[The BOG] was a big part of my life and I'm sorry that I'm leaving."

WE ARE EDUCATING YOUR CHILD'S TEACHERS. THINK BEFORE YOU CUT

Angus McQuilken, student trustee-elect from the Amherst campus said, "For every tuition and fee increase that we take, our schools come that much closer to becoming white, middle-class, elitist, private institutions."

Patty Gates and Bill Hill, two students from Massasoit Community College, read a list of the top ten ten reasons to support higher education. Two of these reasons were: "We, the children are the future of this Commonwealth," and "McDonald's is not hiring."

due to cuts, said North Adams is "one of the best colleges. It is also one of the top three employers in the area. Closing it would destroy the economy [of the area.]" McCaffrey said she supports a fair tax increase to save higher education.

Programs at UMass/Boston have been threatened with closing or restructuring by the state, according to Rich Rooney, student trustee of the Boston campus. The College of Public Community Service is in danger of being moved to the Harbor campus, making it difficult to access for its students.

"CPCS has an average student age of 35, the largest minority enrollment, and is the only college in the center of Boston," he said.

Vernon Manchester, a learning disabled student who attends Bristol Community College, said "the cuts have taken a lot out of learning disabled services. Seventeen staff and faculty have been cut making it difficult to get the help we [learning disabled] need."

Michael Dellapenna of Bridgwater State College said "Classes have been cut, so teachers have heavier course loads and less time for students.

"Education is this state's greatest resource," she said. "And jobs are dependent upon a good educational foundation."

However, Cleven said she opposed the implementation of a capital gains tax, thereby falling short of giving her total support for the other proposed tax increases.

"Research funding coming from private sources is the wave of the future," she said. "[Public higher education] is not subject to the whims of industry because we have a governmental body to say yes or no."

The next tax proposal is not due to be heard by the House of Representatives until after May 1, she said.

An aide to House Speaker George Keverian answered questions from students, apologizing for Keverian's busy schedule.

He also stressed that "Keverian is still one hundred percent behind [the students]," even after the failure of his three proposed tax packages to be passed, or even voted on.

PHI BETA KAPPA

Nu Chapter of Massachusetts

University of Massachusetts at Amherst

The Coordinating Dean of Arts and Sciences, Dr. Frederick Byron, Jr., and Nu Chapter of Phi Beta Kappa are pleased to announce new members elected from the Junior and Senior classes. Phi Beta Kappa is the oldest and most prestigious American honor society in the Liberal Arts. It was founded at the College of William and Mary on December 5, 1776. Yale's chapter was formed in 1780, Harvard's in 1781. During the next century additional chapters were added and in 1883 a national organization called the United Chapters of Phi Beta Kappa was created. At present, only 237 liberal arts colleges or universities have been accredited by the national organization and permitted to form chapters. In New England only six public institutions are so recognized.

Candidates do not apply for membership nor is application made on their behalf. They are nominated by the chapter's faculty members on the basis of their academic records as shown on their transcripts. Candidates must be majors in one of the three faculties of the College of Art and Sciences and must satisfy certain grade-point, foreign language, and distribution requirements set by the national organization. Approximately 4% of Seniors with the strongest academic records are elected each year; one half of 1% of Juniors are selected.

For information on Phi Beta Kappa and its chapter at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst, visit the Phi Beta Kappa display near the card catalogue in the Tower Library.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Male dominance demeans women

I am not a feminist. I am an Anthropology student.

Never having felt oppressed, I laughed when female friends criticized the use of "he" over "she" or "one." My boyfriend considers me his equal. At the University, most males are aware of female equality.

Yvonne Boots

About six months ago, I bought a car. After visiting six garages within two months, (before even passing inspection) I became aware of the mechanical realm. In many ways it's looking through a keyhole with the light of knowledge regarding mechanical things on the other side, and a sign reading "Men only" above.

Horty is a VW serviceman that services my parent's car. He always takes the time to explain things to my father. I brought my car to be tuned up for emmissions (alone).

In picking it up, I asked him a few questions, which he politely ignored. I also noted that my spark plugs were changed. In a pamphlet on emmisions test, the state says: "If your car is emmitting this kind of gas, don't bother changing the spark plugs," so I inquired about this. Horty blew up and told me what I could do with the pamphlet and not to tell him how to fix cars.

Another instance was when I got new front tires put on. (different garage, different state). A friend, Jim, accompanied me for the ride. Jim is 25, does not drive, knows lots about computers but nothing about cars. After waiting, the mechanic comes up to us, looks at Jim (figuring since he is the male, it must be his car) and starts explaining the balancing and valves of the tires.

Patiently awaiting the end of the monologue Jim says, "Tell her, it's her car."

Two weeks back, I was in an accident; hit by another car. I am disappointed at myself now that I let myself be intimidated physically and psychologically. The man was twice my size and trying to blame me for the accident.

I got scared and left. I am going to court to fight it, but right now I feel outnumbered. Male police, male lawyers, male driver.

Where are the women? Do we disappear once we graduate into oblivion? I decided to fix the car myself (replacing the quarter-panel) and even as I worked in the driveway, cars would slow down in passing to stare at a freak of nature: a female under the hood of a car.

Please guys, we're equals now, let us be equals when we graduate, don't demean us by oversimplifying explanations. Don't shut us out of your world, insensitivity occurs with subtle put downs, assumptions and incidents.

And if you don't take me seriously, watch yourselves, I've been looking for a new hood ornament.

Nations' ties exhibit internal likeness

Much has been said about the links between Israel and South Africa. Economic and military ties have been revealed and highlighted. Yet, these are nothing but the natural outcomes of deeper bonds and structural similarities.

Both states divide human beings into legal and political categories. In Israel, citizens are divided into nationalists; the division is not "Israeli" and "non-Israeli", but "Jewish" and "everybody else." "Israeli" appears only on passports.

Eyad Kishawi

The effect of such categorization is that a Jew who has just arrived in the State of Israel has more rights than a non-Jew who was born and raised in Israel, the "Jewish State."

This, of course, is similar to the position of a foreigner who is classified as "white" in South Africa; he/she will have greater privileges than a non-white in that state.

People claim that the dynamics in Israel are more complicated than in South Africa since things are not black and white, but rather Jew and Palestinian.

The American supporters of Israel give many resolutions to the conflict such as transfer of the Palestinians to another Arab state or perhaps make them convert to Judaism, and the conflict would be over. Either case is unacceptable and not achievable.

Palestinians are not allowed to convert even if they wanted to abandon their culture and tradition. Even Jews from a Palestinian background suffer a great deal of discrimination.

Thus the indigenous people, because of Israel's definition of nationality and citizenship, become not only "inferior natives" but foreigners - a non-Jew in a Jewish state.

Zionists, to counter these arguments, offer the fact that whereas in South Africa a non-White is not given the vote, in Israel a non-Jew who is an Israeli citizen can vote.

While this argument is true, it is misleading. History did not begin in 1948, prior to which Jews were minority in Palestine. For the Zionist leadership, reversing the situation by turning Palestinians into a minority became important.

So, Palestinians were expelled during the war of 1948, a fact lost in the historical distortion of the "Arab radio broadcast."

Palestinians were given the vote, but a vote through which nothing is gained, especially dignity. Palestinians suffer from separate and unequal systems of social services. 92 percent of the land of Israel is reserved for exclusive "Jewish" use.

Per capita allocations are made on the basis of "Jewish" and "Arab" localities. In 1986, Israel's prime minister, responding to the accusation that Palestinians receive only 10 to 20 percent of Jewish per capita allocation, insisted that they received a fair and generous 30 percent of Jewish per capita allocation.

In education, the separate Arab school system received only 10 percent of the Jewish per capita allocation. All these policies have been upheld as legal by Israel's supreme court.

In these conditions, nationalist movements, which from their inception have called for a secular democratic system, have been responded to with torture, arrest without charges, detention without trial, deportation, collective punishment of villages and townships, and other violations of universally recognized human rights, both in Israel and South Africa.

In this light, cooperation between the two states can be seen as natural and perhaps inevitable. The goal must be justice and peace for all the peoples who live in both of these nations. The historical lessons of exclusionism cannot be forgotten; lest we repeat the horrors of history!

Eyad Kishawi is a UMass student

Inconsistancies exist in book, film

I don't know about everyone else out there in America, but when I hear that a motion picture has been made to recreate someone's life, I usually assume that it is going to be truthful.

These days, the question that seems to be facing Ron Kovic and Oliver Stone is a question of morality. Is it moral to insert things into your lifestory just to make it appear more exciting?

Susan Inniss

Born on The Fourth of July is the screen version of Kovic's 1976 book recalling his experiences in Vietnam as a Marine soldier. Stone directed and co-scripted the highly-acclaimed film and won himself an Academy Award for his efforts.

But, now after months of reviews and promotions of the film, the media has begun to do some research and to wonder why events that are never mentioned in the book are suddenly appearing in full color across the screen.

Or, even worse, why some of the events that are included in the book have been manipulated to affect the audiences emotions in a far more distressing manner.

It seems the deception of double-speak has peaked in this striking, self-righteous film. Watching this film, the viewer begins to have very strong feelings for Tom Cruise in his portrayal of the wheelchair-bound Kovic. You feel his excitement, his patriotism, his anguish and pain.

To later discover that all this was just a scam to boost enthusiasm for the film makes you very angry. In the industry of mass media, everything is charged up to grab your attention, but pushing this film in the market as a "true-to-life-story" is pure manipulation of the consumer's mind.

Ron Kovic's real story has been described as an "inspirational tragedy," yet Born on the Fourth of July seems to have turned it into a series of high-powered fabricated summaries.

One of the major conflicts in the film is that Cruise fears he has killed one of his own men in a moment of confusion in battle. He carries his guilt with him throughout the entire movie, until he finally gives into his remorsefulness and seeks out the family of the man he is sure he killed.

This is a turning point in the film and an incredibly emotional and powerful scene. Turning to Kovic's book, however, there is no mention of this devotional trip to the man's family and only a slight mention of the shooting episode.

Even more distressing than this is that in real life, Kovic admits that the whole idea for this passionate excursion line comes from a persistent nightmare which he had over the years.

If Oliver Stone thought that this was important enough to include in the film, then why wasn't it as important for him to portray it for what it really was — a nightmare?

It concerns me that people feel everything in today's mass media must be manipulated and exploited before it can be interesting.

I fear that someday people will forget what the true story was, and the exploited version created for selfish means of interest will replace it as the "truth." Old facts will be lost and forgotten, and history may actually be manipulated and changed to how someone thinks it should be, or wants it to be.

I can't help but wonder how many people will perceive this movie as a "true story of innocence lost and courage found," and how many will know the real truth.

Stranger's assistance appreciated

I am writing this letter to publicly thank two UMass students who went out of their way to help a complete stranger in distress.

When I left my lab after several hours of work in Furcolo Hall on the UMass campus, I found my car missing. Not knowing what to do, I approached two young men, and asked them for help.

Since I am a full-time students at Smith College and am only taking a single graduate course at UMass, I was unfamiliar with both the campus and the university parking rules. The young men guessed that I had inadvertantly parked in a tow zone. They offered to drive me to the lot for towed cars several miles away.

The towing company demanded 50 dollars cash, refusing to accept a check, Mastercharge or VISA. I had only eight dollars with me, was 35 miles from home, and would be charged another 20 dollars if I did not pick my car up before nightfall. One of the young men said he had the cash in his dorm room he would be willing to loan me. The other offered to drive me to a bank on the other side of town to gat a cash advance on my VISA to pay the charge, which I did. He then drove me back to the tow lot.

If it had not been for these thoughtful strangers, I would have been stranded. As it was, I recovered my car in time to attend my 3 p.m. class at Smith, and returned home safely to Springfield to pick up my young son from school.

At a time when the papers are full of the misdeeds of youth and the media bombards us daily with stories of drunken brawls, racial incidents, and general mayhem on campus, I thought the kindness of these two young men should be recognized.

One of them, Richard Govoni, is a sophomore in mechanical engineering at UMass; I never learned the name of the other. Both men believed that what they did was nothing remarkable . . . just helping out where they could. Perhaps there are many others at UMass who would have done the same; nonetheless, it is reassuring to know that such fine young people are around. The University is enhanced by their presence.

ARTS & LIVING

Newton duo are nothing like Vega

By GREG ORME
Collegian Staff

Listening to Jonatha and Jennifer one could be forgiven for thinking Suzanne Vega was an ameoba and the female-folk duo was produced by cellular division. Their heavily harmonized, semi-poetic style owes much to this quiet, thoughtful genre. The music is sown up by a sparse, flinty acoustic guitar sound.

The two artists reply to these comparisons with Vega without rancour: "I don't think we sound a lot like anybody else, we sound like us." It is clear the Newton-based women are digging in for an original career of their own and have initiated and financed their own production company, "Propos" releasing their first album Over Oceans.

Originally formed at Amherst College, the band does not maintain a strictly hardline political or feminist stance, preferring to concentrate on issues which engage them artistically or personally at the time of creation; "We're just two women who sing, we try to stay away from preaching."

Complete with chatting and amusing anecdotes between songs, weird clothes (a lamp-shade dress) and whimsical choreography their set reflects their laid-back personalities. Presently the band is searching for a way to extend itself beyond the simple acoustic format. "Grace in Gravity" was recently re-recorded with a full backing band hoping to attain a more appealing mainstream sound (and of course the obligatory record contract).

Jonatha and Jennifer will be appearing at Amherst College at 8p.m., April 15th and 21st. Tickets are $5 for the general public and $1 for Amherst College students.

Of redundant Tasteless Cuts

By JON DRUKMAN
Collegian Correspondent

You all know by now we have a tremendous soft spot for Adrian Sherwood and his gang of musical terrorists. Well, ace percussionist Keith LeBlanc of the Sherwood crew has started his own label, Blanc Records, and the first release on it has arrived recently. It's called Tasteless Cuts featuring DJ Spike.

This album harks back to LeBlanc's first solo record Major Malfunction which was very sparse. On Tasteless Cuts it's back to that formula. The percussion is top notch with the usual intricacy and head damage factor that is part and parcel of any On-U relayed product.

On the opening track, "Baby Bye," On-U vocalist Bim Sherman makes a guest appearance, reciting the lyrics to the Supremes hit "Baby Where Did Our Love Go?" over the percussive backing. There's some interesting jazz sax on "Gaps in Space," and "Mr. President" features a sample of someone saying "Marilyn Monroe is dead" over and over again.

Overall though this is kind of a redundant product. For one thing, it's really just an EP, clocking in at a paltry 27 minutes. For another, this sort of thing has been done better on the two previous Keith LeBlanc solo albums. In fact, most of the best ideas here can be traced back to LeBlanc's excellent "Stranger than Fiction" record, which we would definitely suggest as a surrogate for Tasteless Cuts.

We were rather pleased when we learned of the distribution deal made between Canada's independent Netwerk label and IRS here in America. At last, we thought, a wider availability of some of the coolest stuff happening!

Well, so far it's been hit and miss. Caturwaul wasn't to everybody's taste, although we loved it. MC 900 Foot Jesus seems to be doing very well on the club circuit. Now, there's a new album by a band called The Aquanettas.

DISC JUNKIE

One look at the back cover photos and everyone will instantly think "Bangles." Of course, we're such professionals that we decided to give the record a fair, unbiased audition. Guess what. It sounds like The Bangles, although it does sound like The Bangles back when they were a jangly guitar band before they got raped by evil keyboard-wielding producers.

Still, we never liked The Bangles. This record is too inconsequential to even merit a severe slamming. If there is any justice in the world, nobody at all will find it interesting and the band will vanish without trace. What can be said about a band whose press kit includes this quotation from Jill Richmond, the guitarist: "Eating BBQ Beef Sandwiches on a bus driving thru Mississippi is a serious goal?" How about "go away?"

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES(March 21-April 19): Do not allow yourself to be sidetracked. You get closer to the truth when you heed your instincts. Someone's "logical" arguments could prove false. A spirit of sharing will be reciprocated.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20): Take your time when making major decisions. A friend will help further a pet project if you put your cards on the table. Partnerships are in the spotlight. A change of lifestyle is favored.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20): Rectify a mistake. Higher-ups will notice if you do your best. Showcase a special talent. A display of impatience will only jeopardize an important relationship. Stay cool.

CANCER(June 21-July 22): Investment income grows. Settling into a new job is easier than you expected. Mate or partner will be supportive if you are honest about your intentions. The media influences a big decision.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22): You tend to idolize a family member. Recognize that this person is human. Your wit and intelligence bring you great business success. Adopt a more realistic approach to finances.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22): Exercise greater self-discipline to finish pressing work assignments. What you reap tomorrow is what you sown today. Spend more time alone with your mate. Romance is on the upswing. Show tenderness.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22): An odd occurrence disrupts the workday. Concentrate on tasks you can complete alone. To avoid embarrassment, consult mate or partner before making a social commitment. An invitation merits discussion.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21): Be upfront with a government official and you can avoid a lot of red tape. Research will put you in line for a promotion. Your popularity increases. Be more gracious with subordinates.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21): Spend money for something that will bring you greater peace of mind. You need to protect your mate's feelings. Be tactful. Lost items will be recovered. A freelancer gets a lucky break.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19): An excellent day for negotiating contracts or expanding your business. Your social life is on the upswing. Get out and about. A new friend has ideas that delight you. Limit entertainment expenses.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18): Children need a sympathetic ear, not lectures. A bold approach helps you win a new job or contract. Sudden acceptance by a previously indifferent group should give you pause. Romance looks happy.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20): Do not hurry a project. Quality is what counts. Pay attention to good friends' they want to help you. Long-distance communications boost business profits. A platonic relationship intensifies.

walks, a sacrifice and a wild pitch.

In the third, Bartolucci led off with a single and stole second. Wajda walked and both runners advanced a base on a infield single by Rybczyk. Bases were loaded and nobody was out.

At that point Aprile found both control and courage as she kept UConn scoreless by getting the next two batters to fly out to end the inning.

Despite the cold temperatures and steady wind, a nice crowd of hearty soles did manage to show up and should be given a round of applause.

came to the net, even on Giavara's serve.

Meanwhile, Hechemy shrugged off a second set in which Weiss, according to Hechemy, "just did everything." The match was marred by a game penalty on Weiss, who was unhappy with some of the line calls in the first set and protested a little too loudly.

The key match may have been at number two singles, where Lloyd Teitelbaum lost a close match to Andy Finn, 7-6, 7-5. "I just wasn't hitting the ball well today," Teitelbaum said.

Hartford swept the final three singles matches, as Dan Brahler beat Paul Audet (6-2, 6-2), Rich Lopez outbattled Rich Stone (6-4, 3-6, 6-4) at number five, and Jay Howe beat UMass captain Chris Johnson (6-1, 6-3) to round out the singles at number six.

UMass wasn't through yet, as the number two team of Wasdworth and Audet shook off a slow first set to come back and win, 3-6, 6-3, 6-3. Things were looking up, as both the number one and number three teams for the Minutemen won their first sets.

Unfortunately for the Minutemen, that was as far as the comeback would get. Hartford's number one squad of Giavara and Weiss beat Teitelbaum and Johnson, 3-6, 6-3, 6-3, while at number three doubles, Finn and Scott Rudick fought off Stone and Hechemy, 2-6, 6-3, 6-4 to end the match.

"It was a helluva match," said Hartford coach Kirk Pearson. "UMass beat us in the fall, and we got them back here. It's always a tough match when UMass and Hartford play."

Softball splits pair vs. rival UConn

By DAN SARAZEN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts softball team's home winning streak of 21 games is gone now. But it left Totman Field kicking and screaming as the Minutewomen split a doubleheader with the heavily-ranked University of Connecticut Huskies. Losing the first game, 2-0, UMass then bounced back in the second, going nine innings and winning, 2-1.

"I am a happy coach," said Elaine Sortino. "It's a nice win for us."

The Minutewomen won the second game in grand fashion as they rallied for a run in the eighth when sophomore Holly Aprile scored from third on a wild pitch. UMass would score the winning run with two outs in the ninth, as Aprile hit a single up the middle, bringing senior co-captain Mary Duff in from third to end it.

But the real story of this game was the pitching of freshman Darlene Claffey. Through nine innings Claffey allowed one run (unearned) and only three hits.

"Darlene pitched great," said Sortino.

'Great' almost seems like a understatement for the way Claffey pitched. "This was my hardest game," said Claffey. "UConn is a good team."

UConn came into this game the number one ranked team in the Northeast, and 18th-ranked in the country.

Claffey received some big defensive help in the seventh as she found herself in serious trouble. With nobody out and Huskie runners at second and third, Claffey got Chris Wajda to fly to Aprile (there's that name again) in center and the UConn runner was tagging.

Aprile unloaded a strike to junior Cherie DellAnno, who blocked the plate nicely and applied the tag on a close play at the plate.

"All I was thinking was 'keep my composure and get to the next batter,'" said the freshmen pitcher.

"This win puts us back in the hunt," Sortino said. "It gets us around the corner. It's a nice accomplishment."

In the first game Huskie pitcher Sue Rybczyk entered the game with a tiny 0.49 ERA and did nothing to harm it as she shut out the Minutewomen, 2-0.

UConn scored one in the first as Janna Venice doubled to lead off and scored on a single by Vicky Bartolucci. The Huskies picked up their second run in the second on two Second baseman Jen Miller was named A-10 player-of-the-week last week, while teammate Holly Aprile was co-pitcher-of-the-week.

Miller and Aprile receive Atlantic 10 honors

The University of Massachusetts softball team has the two players responsible for the sweep of the weekly Atlantic 10 player- and pitcher-of-the-week honors.

Co-captain Jen Miller won her first player-of-the-week honor and sophomore Holly Aprile was named A-10 pitcher-of-the-week for the fifth time.

"If you look at the performances they have had individually," said coach Elaine Sortino, "they deserve it."

Last week Miller batted .581, going 10-for-17. Against St. Bonaventure she had four hits with two triples and four RBI's and in a game vs. Penn State Miller went 3-for-3 with two doubles and two RBI's.

"Jenny has been ripping the ball in big situations," Sortino said, "and she has been playing some solid defense."

The A-10 pitcher-of-the-week honors are nothing new for Aprile; her being a sophomore and this being the fifth time she has won the award, one can only wonder how many more she can win it before she graduates.

"Holly threw very well against Hartford," said Sortino, "and against St. Bonaventure she dominated."

Aprile no-hit the Lady Bonnies last weekend and currently leads the A-10 in strikeouts with 43, and wins with seven.

Freshman hurlers lead baseball sweep

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

With eight games in five days, the University of Massachusetts baseball team knew it was going to have to get some serious mileage of out its pitching staff this week.

So far, the Minutemen have come through in good shape, thanks to some solid efforts from the young arms. Yesterday, complete games from a pair of freshmen gave UMass a twinbill sweep of New Hampshire at Lorden-Bergquist Field.

On the heels of freshman Daryle Corriveau's shutout of Boston University on Wednesday, Jim Telgheder went the distance for a 9-4 win in game one, and Jeff Toothaker followed that up in a 5-1 victory in the nightcap (first collegiate wins for both).

"Those were two big complete games for us," said UMass coach Mike Stone.

Telgheder, who has the bloodlines to follow (brother Dave graduated from UMass last year and now pitches in the Mets' farm system), allowed just five hits and two walks while striking out seven. His only rough spot was the sixth, when the Wildcats got four of those hits and scored their four runs.

By that time, the game was well in hand for the Minutemen (12-9). Sophomore Brian Bright's triple keyed a two-run third inning that made it 4-0, and then co-captain Ian Torres (3-for-3, 3 RBIs in the opener) ripped a two-run shot to right in a three-run fourth to make it 7-0.

It was 8-0 when Telgheder ran into trouble in the sixth, but he pitched through it for the win.

Toothaker, who had only thrown four innings entering the day and hadn't pitched since the Florida trip, scattered eight hits and allowed just one unearned run.

Freshman Steve Corradi doubled with one out in the first and moved to third on a wild pitch from 'Cat starter and loser Rob Carpentier. Torres' groundout plated Corradi.

Glenn DiSarcina opened the second with a single and stole second. From there he scored on Lou Olivieri's one-out single to make it 2-0.

Derek Dana's one-out triple that kissed the chalk in right field keyed a two-run fourth. Olivieri delivered Dana with a sharp single to right-center, and he scored after a steal of second, an errant throw and a squeeze bunt by Dan Biagini.

The teams traded runs in the fifth, and Toothaker held UNH off the rest of the way. He did load the bases with one out in the seventh on a walk and two singles, but bounced back with a pair of groundouts to end it.

The Minutemen banged out nine hits in each game, Torres being the big bat in game one. The "Revere Connection" led the way in game two, as Olivieri was 3-for-3 with two RBIs, while Bright added a pair of hits.

Extra Bases: Rhode Island comes in for a pair of Atlantic 10 doubleheaders today (11 a.m.) and tomorrow (noon). Rhody (3-5 in the A-10, 7-14-1 overall) is led by senior outfielder/pitcher Steve Birkett with a .350 average and three homers, as well as a 4.50 ERA on the mound.

UMass is 4-0 in the A-10, having swept four from St. Joe's.

Tennis falls to Hartford

By GREG SUKIENNEK
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's tennis team suffered ist first loss of the spring season yesterday, falling to the University of Hartford, 6-3 at the Upper Boyden Courts.

The Minutemen (1-1) struggled back from a 4-2 deficit in singles play, only to fall short in doubles. Hartford improves to 7-3 on the season.

UMass dug itself a hole early on, getting wins from the number one and three seeds, only to be set back at the other four slots. Barry Wadsworth smothered Hartford's Ken Giavara, 6-3, 6-0 at number one, while Jeff Hechemy prevailed over Greg Weiss, 6-3, 1-6, 6-1.

Of his match, Wadsworth said that he "just attacked the net as much as possible, and he didn't hit enough passing shots to beat me." Wadsowrth repeatedly sliced and

UMass lax teams gear up for big weekend tilts

● Gorillas ready for No. 2 Yale

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

OK, time to sort out the priorities.

Sure, it's Easter weekend (of the long variety), but that isn't until Sunday. And for many the tax man cometh knockin' on Monday, but if you haven't filed already it won't kill you to wait another day.

Get to the point? Alright.

Yale University, which currently boasts the second-best men's lacrosse team in the US of A, will storm Boyden Field tomorrow at 1 p.m. The University of Massachusetts squad will be looking to hand the Elis/Bulldogs their first loss in 11 games.

Translated: This is not as big a game as Syracuse, but it's right up there in the pecking order. Which in most cases should be equated with a huge sea of humanity blanketing The Hill.

At 10-0 after Wednesday's 16-14 win over Brown, Yale is not a fluke by any means. This is a good club.

"I haven't seen them yet, but they're basically the same team as last year," said UMass coach Dick Garber. "They're playing well."

Already they have nailed top-flight teams like Virginia, Cornell (that 20-8 thrashing) and Penn, but the Ivy Leaguers are not invincible.

Two years ago, the 'Dogs came to The Hill 9-0, were greeted by a rabid crowd and went home with their first loss, 20-13. That could happen again tomorrow, given the right scenario (cough, cough, serious implications regarding crowd size).

"It was 8-8 after the first quarter. That was a wild one," Garber said. "The crowd really helped us out."

Yale has some serious guns, starting with senior midfielder Jon Reese and his 36 goals. Senior attack Karl Wimer has added 28, while Jason O'Neill has 38 assists to go along with 13 goals.

Senior goalie Tony Guido has shined with a .716 save percentage and a 7.04 goals against average.

● Gazelles welcome rival UNH to Totman

By ADRIENNE MATT
Collegian Staff

Let's face it, this one's gonna be tough.

The University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team faces the Wildcats of New Hampshire tomorrow at 1 p.m. in a grueling contest of speed and determination.

UNH is currently ranked second in New England and ninth in the Brine/IWLCA Poll, with a record of 5-1, edged only by Harvard University in a close 8-6 game. Recently, James Madison fell to the Wildcats, 10-4, as did Boston College yesterday, 11-4. [By the way, BC lost to JMU 6-3.]

The Wildcats were in the ECAC finals last year and have one national championship to their name (1985).

This season's scoring is led by junior Liz Brickley with 17 goals and eight assists, and sophomore Alita Haytayan with nine goals and seven assists.

Wildcat top netminder is sophomore Christa Hansen who has 51 saves in six games. Freshman Lori Daneili is backup goalkeeper.

"They're an experienced team with a lot of speed," said UMass head coach Patti Bossio. "They have great athletic ability."

Leading the Gazelles in scoring is senior Sue Murphy with 13 goals and one assist, freshman Rachael Splaine with nine goals and one assist and senior Ann King with nine goals.

Junior Karen Pierce has been the lone goaltender for the Gazelles with 99 saves in eight games.

"We'll have to play as good as we did Tuesday (against BC) — plus," Bossio said. "Everyone has to be focused."

The Gazelles go into Saturday's game with a 2-6 record and lots of anxious energy. Defensively, they'll need to be tight and impenetrable around the crease, maintaining their good communications skills. Between Splaine's speed, King's feeds and Murphy's accuracy, the Gazelles could give the Wildcats a serious chase. Few turnovers and draw control can only help a talented team sing their swan song.

Third Gorman fire deemed suspicious

By JULIE LIVINGSTONE
Collegian Staff

Gorman Residence Hall's third fire in a two-week span caused $2,000 worth of damage to the fourth floor trash room early Saturday morning, according to Keith Hoyle, fire prevention officer at Environmental Health and Safety.

No injuries were reported in the blaze.

Amherst Fire Department Captain Al Tower said the cause of the fire is unknown but considered suspicious.

"Any time there is a multitude of fires in the same building, we are very concerned and will call it suspicious."

Several windows were broken and smoke and heat damaged the trash room, Hoyle said. Officials today will check the telecommunication cables for damage, he said.

The Amherst Fire Department responded to the alarm at 1:50 a.m. with three engines, one rescue vehicle and three chief officers.

The fourth floor resident assistant tried unsuccessfully to put out with an extinguisher, Hoyle said.

It seems that the fire began in the bottom of the trash bin, Hoyle said.

Some of the 200 Gorman residents evacuated from the building, who said they were "angered and disgusted by the third fire," stayed with friends, while others waited in Wheeler Residence Hall for the call to return to their rooms.

Gorman residents, accustomed to sitting in the Wheeler lobby during the recent fire evacuations, said: "We've already done this before . . . no problem, we know where we're going."

Tower said the two previous fires on April 3 and 4 are not linked to Saturday's fire.

The April 3 fire in the first floor trash room of Gorman was due to careless disposal of smoking materials, Hoyle said. The April 4 fire in a first floor resident room was started when a student knocked a lit candle to the floor while he was sleeping.

Tower advised all residents to be sure that fire extinguishers are in place and are not being tampered with.

"It would be worth calling security if you see someone walking around whom you don't recognize."

Rate of STDs level off at UMass

By CHRIS MUTHER
Collegian Staff

Although the rate of sexually transmitted diseases among teenagers in Massachusetts is soaring, the number of infected students at the University of Massachusetts has stabilized, according to David Kraft, executive director of Health Services.

According to Kraft, University Health Services continues to treat many students for sexually transmitted diseases, but he said the rate of infection does not appear to be increasing.

"We continue to see a lot of students who come for treatment for [sexually transmitted] diseases, but our statistics don't show an increase," he said.

If left untreated, almost all sexually transmitted diseases can become dangerous, and as a result the infected person, male or female, may become sterile, Kraft said.

Most students are aware that the use of barrier contraceptives, like condoms and dental dams help reduce the spread of sexually transmitted diseases, including AIDS, but not all students are using them, he said.

"We've seen some changes in the attitudes of students when looking at sex, but not everyone has changed their behavior patterns," he said.

Five college groups gear up for Earth Day events

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
Collegian Staff

A host of student organizations in the Five College Area are gearing up for Earth Day this Sunday by holding events they hope will build momentum for increased awareness of the problems facing the planet.

Tomorrow, the University of Massachusetts chapter of the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group is scheduled to kick off Earth Week with a rally at noon on the Student Union steps devoted not only to environmental awareness but also to speak out against racism, sexism and "prejudices of every kind."

Aaron Rome, the UMass coordinator for Earth Day, said the importance of the day is not limited to only one day.

"Earth Day is not just one day," he said. "But a kick off day for the '90's decade of environmental awareness."

The first Earth Day in 1970 was former Senator Gaylord Nelson's idea, after he saw the impact of an oil spill which hit Santa Barbara, California in 1969. He has called Earth Day a "watershed [period] in American politics." The Environmental Protection Agency and the first Clean Air Act are two of the most visible results of the 1970 Earth Day, said Rome.

A list of Earth Day events happening at the Five Colleges:

April 17

5 p.m. Pollution in Mill River (Paradise Pond): Twenty Years of Change. Lecture and discussion by John Burk of the Biology Dept. Seelye 15. Smith College.

7p.m. Lou Gold from the Rainforest Action Group will talk about preserving the rainforests. University.

7:30 p.m. "Pesticide Residue on the Food We Eat" a presentation by the Clean Water Action Group. Amherst College.

7:15 p.m. Vegitarianism and the Earth. Lecture in New York Room Mary Wooley Building. Mt. Holyoke.

April 18

Fewer students living in dorms this semester

By NICOLE BAKER
Collegian Correspondent

A decrease in the number of students living in the residence halls this semester is largely due to the downsizing of the University, according to Joseph Zannini, director of Housing Services.

This semester the rate of occupancy is only 88 percent, four percent less than the desired average. Although the residence halls are not completely filled, Zannini said: "There will be close to 100 percent occupancy next fall, but it is very possible we will face another decrease in the spring semester of next year."

The rate of occupancy for the second semester of any academic year generally depends upon the amount of upperclassmen who choose to remain in the dorms, he said.

Those who live off campus usually sign one-year leases and therefore rarely move back to campus. It is also difficult for upperclassmen to return in the fall since underclassmen are guaranteed housing and have first priority.

University housing must compete with off-campus living to maintain the number of upperclassmen on campus.

"The new telecommunications system, which will be available in each dorm next semester, will be an incentive to remain on campus," Zannini said, adding that students residing on campus will have access to a computer system connected to the Tower Library.

According to Zannini, the decrease in students living on campus has a significant effect on the residence halls. He said students have more flexibility in room choosing, but with fewer students in the residence halls, the cost of housing will increase.

Due to a change in the Student Activities Trust Fund package, the price of on-campus housing will increase $230 which "will be the biggest yet and will be shocking to some students."

ROTC teams test endurance

By KENDRA PRATT
Collegian Staff

Reserve Officer Training Corps teams from four colleges and universities in Massachusetts faced each other Saturday in physical and tactical competitions near the Warren G. McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

Eight-member teams from the University of Massachusetts, Worcester Polytechnical College, Fitchburg State College and Western New England College competed in the semi-annual R.O.T.C. Head to Head Ranger Challenge.

The four teams battled for points in four separate events — the Army Physical Fitness Test, a grenade assault test, a rope bridge exercise and a six kilometer race where cadets carried a 30 pound rucksack.

Sgt. Maj. Charles Coleman said eight out of some 160 UMass cadets were chosen for the team because of their motivation and physical strength.

UMass team captain Jayson Gilberti said: "Most members of our team have been training this semester and last semester for two hours, three times a week in both physical and tactical training. We've put a lot of time into it."

For the Army Physical Fitness Test, each cadet had to do 82 push-ups in two minutes and also 92 sit-ups in two minutes, said Maj. Jack Moore.

The teams then ran for two miles under an 11:35 limit.

Tactical and cooperative abilities were also tested. Team members threw 'dummy' grenades and competed in rope bridge exercises.

The 'dummy' grenades were metal cylinders, Moore said.

Each cadet had to crawl through the course and throw the metal cylinders approximately 25 feet to the different

UMass fraternity, cops relay to help Jimmy Fund

By KEITH NICHOLSON
Collegian Correspondent

On April 27 and 28, the University of Massachusetts chapter of Delta Upsilon, in conjunction with the Amherst Police Department, will conduct their fourth annual Boston to Amherst Jimmy Fund relay.

Delta Upsilon will roll a chariot west on Route 9 to benefit the Dana Farber Institute. This Boston-based research hospital is dedicated to the fight against childhood cancer, which is funded chiefly through the Jimmy Fund.

Through the efforts of the Jimmy Fund, previously incurable forms of cancer can now be treated. According to the institute, survival rates for childhood leukemia have jumped from five percent to 50 percent in recent years. Bone cancer in 1972 claimed eighty percent of its victims can now be cured in seventy percent of cases. Also childhood Lymphoma, which previously had no effective treatment can now be treated in seventy-five percent of cases.

"These numbers proved to us that the Jimmy Fund helps fight cancer and we realized could do even better with our help," said coordinator of the run, Shawn King. "When the brothers toured the Dana Farber Institute and saw the suffering of the children, we decided to dedicate Delta Upsilon to fighting cancer."

"Last year we raised $5,400 and this year we are setting our sights on $10,000 to help the Jimmy Fund," said King.

The brothers of Delta Upsilon will have a table on the Campus Center Concourse starting on Wednesday April 11. They will be collecting donations and selling raffle tickets for the Jimmy Fund until April 27.

Friends remember number one son

WORCESTER, Mass. (AP) — A year after the death of Abbie Hoffman, efforts are quietly under way in his conservative hometown to create a memorial to his life.

So far, the fund-raising has only just begun and organizers haven't yet decided what kind of memorial one creates for a man who wrote "Steal This Book" and "Revolution for the Hell of It."

"Some of this comes from individuals rather than organizations, but that's very fitting for the way he worked," said Rabbi Norman Mendel of the Temple Emanuel, which Hoffman attended.

"Abbie was very proud of the fact that he came from Worcester," said Jack Hoffman, Abbie's younger brother, who said the lack of attention from local government was a disappointment, but not a surprise.

Dan Dick, a retired college professor and an organizer of the Abbie Hoffman Living Memorial Fund committee, said he expects most of the memorial efforts will come from grassroots levels.

"Abbie was never part of Worcester's government in the sense that Abbie was a whistleblower, a dissenter," he said.

So far, the committee has raised about $1,500, much of it from a benefit showing of "Born on the Fourth of July," which carries an "in memoriam" tag for Hoffman in the end credits, Dick said. The fund has an immediate goal of raising $2,500. Discussions of the memorial have focused on creating a lecture series, a scholarship or annual award, he said.

Abbie Hoffman and Amy Carter were among a group of protesters acquitted in April 1988 of charges stemming from a demonstration against CIA recruiters at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

Political agendas hit BOG

A friend remarked to me about the large number of sea gulls circling above the Campus Pond.

I noticed them, too. But not on the pond — looking for garbage to eat and people to shit on.

Actually, I see more of them in 817 Campus Center. More specifically, the Board of Governors office.

Gayle Long

The BOG has been polarized over the recent election of officers. The installation of the atypical conservative (does that mean radical, I would like to know?) Ed Corrigan as vice-chair was only the beginning. The next step was worse.

The conservatives on the BOG, which have been elected in large numbers this year to the probable apathy of the campus community, have decided that the BOG will be their crutch of power.

However, as stated in the Board of Governors' Constitution's Mission Statement, the BOG's purpose is, "to seek out, develop and represent to the Campus Center/Student Union management the varied interests and needs of those serviced by the CC/SU complex and to work to ensure an appropriate balance of services, activities, and revenue generation within that facility. . . the Board is to be the principle and primary voice in administrating and formulating operating policies and procedures for the CC/SU Complex . . ."

Once on the BOG, they decided the only way to really be in power was to install figure heads.

Mary Noone, newly elected a governor scarcely three weeks ago, decided to run for BOG Treasurer against an incumbent not only with an incredible track record, but someone who would not bring his own politics into the Board office.

Ironically, Garron Carvalho came to the position when no one else wanted the job, including the conservatives, who wanted neither the responsibility nor the time commitment. But now, realizing the possible power of the BOG, they want it.

The sad part of Noone's election to the BOG is two-fold: she will never accomplish anything on a polarized BOG, nor is she truly in power.

In reality, the conservatives asked her to run because they think that she is easily manipulated with their own political aspiriations simply because she is a woman. They, giving her this 'title,' have thrown her a consolatory bone to keep her in check.

Otherwise, she will carry out the dictates of these men, who will convince her that the 'good of the party' is what they mandate to her. They will also, through this power, ensure that their words are applicable to the entire campus as well as the miniscule number of radical conservatives.

I cannot respect a woman who lives the oppressed role of one dominated in a male-based society. I believe that Noone sees herself an equal to theses male counterparts; however, I doubt that these men reciprocate the idea. They are the epitome of egotistical, self-important ignoramuses with their own agenda. I would say 'political agenda,' but another pathetic twist in this situation is that politics deals with the people. These men want to deal solely with themselves.

Governor Bill Hewitt was quoted in Friday's Colleigan as saying in regards to his support for Noone as, "When you see ambition, you harness it." But whose ambition are you harnessing?

So, the campus will suffer for the lack of accomplishments on the BOG not only for the rest of the semester, but for next year as well. Noone will take her place in an office where the conservatives backing her are her only friends.

Noone, according to chairwoman Susan Gordon,"is not responsible for this. But she knows nothing about the BOG. [Noone] knows nothing of the budgetary process of the BOG, nor has she served on any committee. To entrust her with power, signature responsibility, or responsibility of the Budgets Committee, would be insane."

To her, I have only one thing to say: should you take the initiative to do something on your own, make sure that you ask your 'friends' first. Otherwise, if the BOG becomes a financial fiasco, do not be surprised if they all turn and point the blaming finger at you.

Rape: 'It's just inevitable'

If it's inevitable, just relax and enjoy it.
— Clayton Williams, Texas GOP candidate for governor, comparing the rain spoiling his campaign rally to rape.

Last week, a man told an Austin woman just before he raped her, "It's just like Clayton Williams said, 'relax and enjoy it if it's inevitable.' "

Meredith O'Brien

Also last week, a UMass student who was charged with three counts of rape pleaded guilty to assault and battery on a woman at a fraternity party last year. He was ordered on probation and counseling for a mere six months in the Men's Resource Connection.

The student had alleged that the woman had displayed "provocative" behavior at the party.

His lawyer attempted to have the trial moved to another county saying men could not get a fair trial in Hampshire County because of the "continuing public dialogue" about violence against women

A retrial was called in the Hampshire County Superior Court last week for the case of a New Jersey man who allegedly raped an Amherst woman in the laundry room of an apartment complex where she lived. A juror admitted she had been molested as a child, so the judge declared a mistrial.

On Friday night, 20/20 ran a segment devoted to rape on campus. They described the language used by many campus men regarding rape.

Terms such as: "pulling up the train"(a line-up of men to rape a woman), "beaching" (leaving a woman lying helplessly like a "beached whale" while men take their turns raping her) and "spectrum" (the crowd entertainment event, watching a woman get raped) were cited as common phrases in the college male vocabulary.

A few months ago, a judge told a rape victim that she was asking to be raped because she wore a lace skirt with no underwear. The alleged rapist went free.

. . . but women simply ask for it.

If women know their attacker(s), there is no reason why they could not have prevented rape if they really did not want sex.

If women dress to impress — i.e. try to look sexy or attractive to the opposite sex — they know what they're asking for.

If women go to fraternity parties, they might as well consider themselves target practice for all of its pledges.

If women go to a party and get drunk with the male friends they trust, they should expect their friends to attack them. They did get drunk . . . they must have wanted it badly.

If women want to actually prove they were raped, they have to make sure they are bruised badly (to show vehement resistance), have scratched their attacker(s) severely and have never had nor displayed any sexuality during the time in question.

Women just have to understand that once they give any indication that they have any desire for sex, men are instantly turned into sex machines that cannot be turned off until they get their fill . . . who are we kidding, men aren't compassionate, considerate or rational, are they?

Women also have to understand that college-aged men cannot have the rest of their lives tarnished by measly rape charges, after all — it was only a stupid mistake.

But most of all, we women should never forget that if rape is inevitable we should simply sit back, rather lie back and enjoy it, the pain shouldn't last too long.

Singling out Israel's linkage to South Africa wrong

There has recently been a newborn effort to link Israel (the frontrunner for Great Satan of the world) with South Africa.

Let's take a closer look:

Yes, Israel trades with South Africa. This news is not new, and one would be hard-pressed to find an American Jew who supports such trade. And, unlike the image presented by some Third World students on this campus, Israel does not do the most trade with South Africa.

Ever heard of Japan?

According to Business Week (Feb. 1, 1988), Japan did $4.1 billion in trade with South Africa in 1987. Not only were they South Africa's greatest trading partner, but Japan has been widening the gap. The 1987 figure was an increase of 14 percent from the previous year. Comparatively, the U.S. trade with South Africa in 1987 was $2.9 billion, a 20 percent decrease from 1986.

DEMOCRATS ANONYMOUS
MARTELLE 1990 NEW YORK NEWSDAY
"THE FIRST STEP TO RECOVERY IS ADMITTING YOU ARE A DEMOCRAT !..."

Japan trades VCRs, industrial equipment and cars (Nissan's trade with South Africa was up 40 percent in 1987). But most important, Japan trades high-tech equipment, such as microchips, which more than anything else help the sanction-laden South African whites.

And unlike Israel or the United States, where people criticize trade with South Africa, Japan's citizens are less concerned.

"There are no natural critics of apartheid here," Japanese economist Akira Kusuhara told Businessweek.

Japan also has a problem dealing with minorities. Unlike Israel and the United States, where overt racism is generally frowned upon, Japan has been the site of racist depictions of Blacks in advertising and mannequins and dolls that grossly distort Black features. Of course, few can forget former Prime Minister Nakasone's 1986 comments that lazy Black and Hispanics were destroying the U.S. economy.

But no matter how great the problems are in Japan regarding U.S. minorities or South Africa, few here at UMass have criticized our trading partner.

Perhaps one reason is because of another region Japan trades with — the Middle East. Perhaps the reason some Third World students have come down so heavily on Israel and the United States but not Japan is because Japan has invested and aided so many Third World nations.

"[Japan] became highly conscious of Arab political pressures, and rushed to offer immense aid projects to placate the Arab nations, while intensifying their already close relations with Iran," said Hugh Patrick and Henry Rosovsky in their book Asia's New Giant.

After the United States, Japan's best trading partner is Saudi Arabia. Among the nations Japan has invested most heavily are Saudi Arabia, Syria and Kuwait.

It's easy to pick on Israel, especially when they trade with countries like South Africa. However, it isn't correct to compare them to South Africa since Jews are the majority in Israel and whites are the minority in South Africa. Jews have always been in Israel (since the days of Moses, at least), whereas the colonization of South Africa by the Afrikaners is fairly recent. Let's also not forget that it was the United Nations who created the modern state of Israel, while no one gave South African whites any such lands.

While it's right for us to call upon Israel to divest from South Africa, we should place equal pressure on all the other countries with which South Africa trades, including the United States, Canada, most of Europe and, of course, Japan.

To single out Israel is wrong, and a more neutral observer might call such criticism veiled anti-Semitism. That's another story, however, and would never wash with those students critical of Israel.

Miracle hits road again

Miracle Legion
Pearl Street
Friday, April 13

Miracle Legion showcased new and old material Friday night at Pearl Street. Playing to a mellow, intimate crowd, the New Haven-based band proved that their four-month lapse in touring did not go to waste.

When founding members, singer Mark Mulcahy and guitarist Ray Neal, found themselves minus a drummer and bassist in 1988, they didn't despair — the two became Miracle Legion the acoustic duo. At first, Mulcahy recalls, the songs sounded really flat without the rhythm section, but it was only a matter of adaptation before they could be played at 100-odd shows, including the historic Sugarcubes tour in 1988, which culminated with Miracle Legion's fourth album, Me and Mr. Ray.

In spring of 1989, Miracle Legion debuted as a four-member band, this time with Dave McCafferty on bass and Spot on drums. This, and the later addition of guitarist/saxophonist Richard "Doc" Brown, posed new challenges in the band's renditions of past material, as well as in the creation of new material.

As displayed at Friday's show, the result is a full, rich sound; those who accuse the band of being R.E.M. copycats no longer have a case. The sax, although somewhat extraneous sometimes, lends a solid rock 'n' roll quality to folky pop songs preoccupied with childhood nostalgia and loss.

According to Mulcahy, this new direction is only logical; the point is "to try to find space for each person in the arrangement of the songs, particularly the additional fifth member." The band plans to tour the new material in order to determine what does and doesn't work, said Mulcahy, hinting that a new album is also on the roster of things to do in the near future. In any case, this definitely appears to be a turning point in Miracle Legion's seven-year history. Those who missed Friday's show can catch them at TT the Bears in Cambridge in two weeks.

Gold speaks for bears tonight

By REBECCA HOLMES
Collegian Correspondent

Environmentalist Lou Gold returns to UMass today by popular demand. Formerly a professor of political science at Oberlin College in Ohio and of the University of Illinois, Gold will bring his story telling excellence to Mahar Auditorium at 8 p.m.

"I used to tell my students to drop out of University and discover the real world," explains Gold of the change in his lifestyle, "and then I took my own advice."

Lou's discovery was Bald Mountain, in the Siskiyou region of Oregon. Since the early '80s, Lou has spent from May to September of every year alone on Bald Mountain, to which he considers himself wed.

On the summit, he erected a medicine wheel, a Sioux tradition which asserts the unity of life and the relationship of all living things. Ironically the medicine wheel occupies the former site of a tourist garbage dump, the remains of which are cleared to one side and now rest under a homemade sign: "This trash pile is being preserved on site as an artifact of past forest service management. Please handle with care as these articles may be of future archeological significance."

During his solitary vigil on Bald Mountain Lou carved himself a walking stick. He began to tell stories to the peace stick, and to share them with visitors to the mountain.

One day the peace stick demanded that Lou return to the city and use his knowledge of politics to make the system work for the environment. After all, he says "Bears don't write letters and owls don't vote."

Lou now divides his time between lecturing and campaigning to preserve the old-growth forests of the North-Eastern U.S. He has a wealth of information about the forest environment, and tells stories of the wonderful plants and animals that live in it. Beneath the pastoral continent is one man's determination to save this incredible resource from what he sadly terms, "the follies and foibles of a forestry service."

Gold is deeply involved in the current battle between nature and the timber industry underway in the Siskiyou region. The political tactics of the powerful timber companies, aided and abetted by the U.S. Forest Service, have translated the conflict into "the spotted owl versus local jobs." Setting the lumber workers against one endangered inhabitant of the forest is a false simplification of a complex environmental issue, according to Gold.

Gold stresses the urgent need for citizen empowerment in the race to preserve the environment. His message comes across loud and clear to all who hear his presentations: "Environmentalism is no longer a spectator sport."

Fugazi bring P.O.W.E.R. to Pearl St.

Fugazi
Pearl St.
Sat. April 14

Fugazi, headlining a benefit for Necessities/Necesidades, a battered woman's program in Northampton, delivered an absolutely kinetic set to an enthusiastic crowd of about 500 at Pearl St. on Saturday afternoon.

Sponsored by P.O.W.E.R (Progressive Organization for Women's Rights at UMass), WOZQ and the Everywoman's center, the show is part of a group of events entitled "Never Again a Battered Woman: A Week of Reflection and Response to Violence Against Women." This has got to be one of the most incredible shows of 1990.

There is nothing like live Fugazi; they give their fans 200 percent, developing an instant rapport with their audience and devoting spellbinding, bitter passion and completely honest commitment to social change. This ain't no flim flamby, money grubbing social consciousness either.

Fugazi is a difficult band to categorize; they transcend hardcore, but put on a powerful hardcore show.

Soothing art from Stoney's hand

By REBECCA SHORT
Collegian Correspondent

Relax! Be content, take your mind on a trip. Head down to the Northampton Art Center just next to the Academy of Music. There you will be welcomed in by the artwork of Laura Radwell and Gregory Stone.

Laura Radwell's work incorporates an appreciation for the environment we tend to forget about. As you walk around the East Gallery her self portrait, done in oils, watches you walk through the room. She includes paintings in oils of water scenes, fields, and paths that can carry you away.

She uses vibrant colors or soft pastels in her work to reflect the mood of the scene. Some of her works, like "Salt March, Welfleet" is like looking out a small picture window into a world of vibrant colors; with shades of greens and blues, offset by the purple and pink flora. "Arcadia Hills" lets us enter a new dimension of the surrounding environment. "River Bend" is a bright melody of a winter forest and river. In all her paintings the colors present a sense of serenity.

Gregory Stone's work takes you from the environment to the people that live in it. His work is not a dark image of society. Instead, he uses shading to give the paintings a brighter view of the homeless, racism, and loneliness. His works include ceramic sculpture, oil paints, and one sketch. It leaves you with a reminder of the problems in society. Yet, with the expressions of the faces he draws and sculpts you also feel a new sense of strength and hope.

The painting "Funeral for John Doe," is an excellent piece of art work and social commentary. The mere shadow of a crucifix and the deep brown colors used, are enough to present the struggles many people go through. There are two homeless people, one almost entirely hidden in the shadows. Then there are only six other people, one white. He has his arm outstretched to another man sitting in front of him.

"Attack on the Homeless, Harlem River Drive" is titled for its content. Big John, Mr. Skibiski, The Butcher, and Allison are people you are likely to see everyday. Yet he also painted Mariam, Springfield and Hodgkins, Springfield who are people you may look at, but don't see: the homeless. The rest of the world seems to be going by without them. When you leave you will feel like you met someone new, and you have, another part of yourself.

So, relax; and hurry and see this mind opening gallery show from April 10th to May 16th, with an opening reception tonight from 7-9 p.m.

■ Fugazi

Injections of reggae and funky bass lines flavor their precise, tight instrumentation, and Ian Mackaye, former straight edge guru of the pioneering D.C. hardcore band Minor Threat, deserves utmost respect for his non preachy intellectualism and command of his audience.

Songs ranged from Fugazi's two EP's Fugazi and Margin Walker, to brand new material from freshly released Repeater (which by the way is one of those albums you can't get enough of hearing, despite the fact that Fugazi is rather unstudiogenic compared to live performances).

The highlight of their one and a half hour set was the song "Suggestion" from the band's first EP. It was introduced by Mackaye as being "a song about rape. This is a song about molestation. This is a song about sexual harassment." In the middle of the song, Mackaye spoke out about rape and movingly admitted that he had been sexually molested as a child. By the end of the song, some struggled against tears. It was one of those rare moments when band and audience truly connect and react.

Mackaye's attitude that awareness and action are the keys to social change was truly inspiring. He also spoke out against the lazy, destructive way of solving a complex problem. The anthematic, infectious "Repeater" captures this idea.

The bold determination and sheer explosiveness of this band on stage is an amazing experience.

For those who missed Saturday's show, Fugazi will be playing a benefit for Boston Living Center and AIDS Hospice April 20 at Massachusetts Art Gym Building in Boston at 8 p.m. with Philly band Scram! and Boston's own Scudder.

D.C. band Holy Rollers revved the crowd up for Fugazi, while garagey, 70s punk influenced The Brood and the cool, trashy Slit's like Sex Kitchen (featuring Amy and Steve from Gidget Goes to Hell) opened up for the all ages show.

Wenomadman entertains with social commentary

By REBECCA HOLMES
Collegian Correspondent

Wenomadmen
Hampden Theater
Thursday, April 12

Thursday evening: I missed the second episode of David Lynch's TV series Twin Peaks. The VCR refused to cooperate with all attempts to record, and I set out for Hampden Theater reluctantly, knowing I would have to rely on my friend's memory for an account of the newest twists to the story.

Fortunately I was more than adequately recompensed by the evening's entertainment. Theatre Grottesco's Wenomadmen, presented by Residential Arts as part of the Outer Limits Series, was both artful and refreshing.

Wenomadmen deals with serious political, environmental and social issues, yet at no point does it lapse into morbidity or a tendency to moralize. Wenomadmen presents a bizarre world of color and comedy. Its opening scene bombards us with movement and industriousness. It is not immediately apparent what is going on, but we quickly grasp the essence of an alien language and gesture. (Certain gestures, it seems, are universal!)

Visitors to the scene belong to higher castes, and they explain that what we see is ship-building. Selected members of the community will escape on the ships when the city meets its impending fate.

There is a sizeable hole in the atmosphere through which the harmful rays of the sun have penetrated, reducing most of the earth's surface to desert (sound familiar?). Resources are scarce and the water supply for this particular city is about to run dry.

Alarm sirens sound and worker/driver oak (Malcolm Tulip) takes his place at the wheel of ship 24. In the panic of evacuation, ship 24 leaves safely, but three of its four passengers are not who they are supposed to be. Aboard are an entertainer's valet (John Flax), the General's umbrella carrier (Elizabeth Wiseman) and a failed student (Paul Herwig).

The resulting power struggle involves deception, tyranny and muting, and becomes increasingly absurd. The umbrella-carrier impersonates her former employer down to his mannerisms and personal habits. She tries to recreate the institutions of power — a courtroom, a military drill — but finds the old institutions anachronistic in the new context.

Similarly the student strives for power, using his intellectual supremacy. He asserts that science is the answer, but his logic is ridiculous: "Backwards is forwards" he cries, "Numbers are your friends."

The four seek escapism alternately in materialism, ambition and sentimentality. They gorge themselves on intoxicating green fruit but wake the next day to spectacular sickness and pain.

Institutional law and education thus ridiculed, and drugs rejected as a viable alternative, it is the common sense and humanity of worker/driver 24 that finally wins out.

target areas. The targets were car tires and a wood plank.

Moore said the rope bridge exercise tested the teams' cooperative and leadership skills to get all eight members over a stream with one rope. He said the points for this maneuver were determined by the teams' speed and accuracy.

"One team member races across the stream to wrap the rope around a tree," Moore said. "Then, the whole team pulls the rope tight and everyone crosses."

By gaining the most points out of a possible count of 300, Worcester Polytechnical College won the challenge. Fitchburg placed second, UMass was third, Western New England College placed last.

WOMEN'S ISSUES

Central students found diversity in the dormitory

By MELISSA MANOLIS
Collegian Correspondent

The Student Diversity Floor on the fourth floor of Brett House in the Central Residential Area is a place where social and cultural diversity is explored in a community atmosphere.

The program on the floor was instituted in the fall semester of 1987 as a part of the University's goal to promote the acceptance and understanding of diversity. It is administered by Residential Education.

Resident Assistant Leigh Callihan first learned about the diversity floor when she was asked to lead a discussion on violence against women and pornography as part of her job as an Educator Advocate for the Everywoman's Center.

She provides programming for the floor. She said she has many plans for the future. She has a lot of enthusiasm for the foor because she said, "I could use the training I've had."

Past activities on the floor include poetry readings, an informal tea and film series with topics as diverse as the genocide of Native Americans in "The Broken Rainbow" and the Civil Rights movement in "Eyes on the Prize." In conjunction with Women's History month, films such as "Rosa Luxembourg," and "Killing Us Softly," were shown.

The Diversity Floor, while being a place of education is also a place of community. One resident, Jon Berger said, "It's more of a home than a barracks."

Callihan said the floor is a "safe space for people."

Residents of the Diversity Floor take an interest in issues larger than their floor or the university. Resident Lynne Vickers said, "We are interested in more than our classes."

What binds them together is an interest in community and in diversity. They feel that diversity should be given more than lip service. Berger said: "People take it in doses that have to be endured."

Participation in this program requires an educational commitment of participating in a one credit weekend workshop in the fall and enrollment in a three credit class titled, Diversity and Education in the spring.

These courses, which carry a general education/diversity designation are administered by the Resident Director Khandi Bourne and the Assistant Resident Director Sue Thrasher. The courses focus on understanding and preventing sexism, racism, anti-Semitism and heterosexism.

Bourne is highly supportive of the program and said residence education is important and valuable because constructive living conditions are closely tied to academic inquiry and achievement.

Bourne said the floor contributes to acceptance of diversity because it has "at least raised consciousness at most student activism" adding that "the advantage of the diversity floor is to gather together people committed to making a difference.

The program has a goal of 75 percent enrollment by April 19. The floor is voluntary and opened to all students. In an effort to increase participant diversity students of all races, backgrounds and ideologies are encouraged to apply but all that is required is an interest in understanding and learning about diversity. An information session and reception will be held on Tuesday April 17 from 6:00 — 7:00 p.m. in the Cluster Office, first floor Brett.

Views differ in Third World Caucus

By MELISSA MANOLIS
Collegian Correspondent

The Third World Caucus, which started as an umbrella group to assure the representation of Third World concerns in the Student Senate, has broadened to represent those outside the realm of student government.

Michelle Joseph, a sophomore English major at the University of Massachusetts, said the Third World Caucus is just one of the four organizations she works for on campus that is directed by women. She said she admires women who have the skill and ambition to lead these groups and wants to work with them.

Michelle said Registered Student Organizations are an essential part of this campus because they directly serve the student interest and because 48 percent directly serve minorities.

Chi Imadi, a sophomore microbiology major at UMass, who is on the board of the Third World Caucus, holds a different view on the future of women.

Imadi asserts that society does not have a real place for minorities. Race comes before gender for her because "there's no unity between all women but there is a basic unity between Black people." She said because of societal stereotypes, anyone looking at her sees a Black woman, not a woman.

Imadi said she sees splits in women as a gender because a White woman would identify with a White man before a Black woman. Joseph said she disagrees with this. She said there is more hope for women because women are "getting excited" and "women are coming together."

She said: "being a Black woman on UMass campus is special." In her involvement with organizations on campus as a Black and as a woman she said she is looked to as a representative with a unique view.

This attention is beneficial Joseph said, because in working with others she has come to realize that she is a "powerful person." She said, "I know I can take care of my people."

One area where both women agree is abortion. They see it as a matter of human and personal freedom.

Imadi said, this is one of the few areas where women will unite against the predominantly White male establishment that wants to remove or restrain this right.

"When someone takes your rights away it gets dangerous as a human being." said Imadi.

Although both women, as Blacks and as women foresee a future that entails a struggle, they agreed that they are confident.

They expect a lot as women. Joseph said: "We are going to work with men and communicate on the same level with men and take charge of our career and our children."

"This struggle is a result of prejudice against other races and other sexes," she said, adding that, "I expect women to achieve and that what we need is more unity and communication between people."

Are You Really Ready To Join The Business World?

Make sure with training at Royal Insurance as a COMMERCIAL LINES UNDERWRITER

Specific knowledge leading to an exciting life in business is yours to gain through training in COMMERCIAL LINES UNDERWRITING at Royal Insurance.

As a long established, worldwide property/casualty insurance carrier with an eye on the future (yours and ours), we offer a comprehensive 8-month paid program in several attractive training locations. Few companies in the industry can say as much.

Before you decide to investigate this opportunity to shape a productive career, ask these questions of yourself:

- Do I have a mind that probes beyond the surface?
- Can I grasp new concepts quickly?
- Am I an analytical problem solver, able to develop innovative solutions?
- Do I want a role that challenges me to do my own thinking and to arrive at independent decisions?
- Upon completion of training, am I willing to relocate to any major point in the U.S. to launch a rewarding business life?

Positive answers can mean that business insurance underwriting is right for you. Qualifications include a BS/BA, strong interpersonal/communication skills, and ability to make presentations at executive level.

We provide excellent salaries and benefits.

Although we haven't been on campus this year to see you personally, we still want to hear from you. Please write or send resume to:

December, 50 percent of the UMass students questioned said their sexual behavior has changed in response to the AIDS epidemic.

Forty percent of the respondents said they were either very or somewhat likely to abstain from sex due to AIDS. However, only 29 percent of the men surveyed said they would abstain from sex as opposed to 50 percent of the women surveyed.

According to the study, 50 percent of all the sexually active respondents said they use condoms. Close to 88 percent said they were very likely to ask a sexual partner to wear a condom to reduce the spread of AIDS. A little more than 70 percent said they would refuse to have sex with partners who would not wear a condom.

The majority of UMass respondents said they do not feel susceptible to AIDS and 79 percent said they would probably not get tested for AIDS.

According to a study released last week by the Massachusetts Public Health Commission, 20 percent of AIDS cases in Massachusetts have occurred in people between the ages of 20 and 29.

Since the incubation period for AIDS is eight to 10 years, 20 percent of the people with AIDS in Massachusetts contracted it while in their teens, and may show no signs of the disease until they are in their 20s.

The study reported that one in seven teenagers in Massachusetts contracts a sexually transmitted disease every year and teenagers account for 25 percent of all the sexually transmitted diseases each year in Massachusetts.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES(March 21-April 19): Greater control over your own life is a must. Be certain others understand your needs. Business communications require closer scrutiny. Do not ignore someone's opinion. Stubbornness can be costly.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20): Do some research before putting an important proposal on paper. What you find out could change your feelings about an idea. Constructive criticism will save you time and money.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20): Keep track of credit card purchases to avoid ending up with a bill you cannot pay. Financial deals and personnel matters enjoy favorable influences. Discuss a promotion in a social setting.

CANCER(June 21-July 22): Take tests and enter competitions. Hard work will earn you the assignment you want. Peace of mind is linked to reducing your debts. Keep your private ambitions to yourself. Romance is chancy.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22): An old friend promotes your talents. An exciting offer is possible. Adjust to a new situation instead of trying to change it. Finalize a business deal before negotiations fall apart. Postpone romance.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22): Look at a competitor's actions objectively and you will be able to beat him at his own game. Old friends offer a suggestion worth considering. Dress your best for a first date.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22): Passions run high today. Guessing could cause trouble between you and romantic partner. A phone call leaves you walking on air. A previously rejected idea finds a warm welcome.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21): You are easily impressed now. Approach newcomers with caution. Some requests will be granted but not those for money. Refuse to spend what you do not have. Do more things on your own.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21): Your creativity is at a peak. Hinting could cause trouble between you and loved ones. Say what you mean. Financial woes fade. Preparation is the key to landing a job or contract.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19): Steer clear of time-consuming activities that have proved unproductive. A job opportunity should be pursued immediately. Social pressures influence what you do this evening. Dieters succeed where they previously failed. Pursue romance.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18): Travel now and you will reap wonderful benefits next year. You could receive an award or bonus for your past efforts. Do not press an obvious advantage. New partnerships work better than old ones.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20): Romance dominates your thoughts. Use your talents for positive purposes. An old idea attracts new attention. Seek the advice of influential higher-ups. Teamwork is favored.

starter Dan O'Leary.

In the nightcap, freshman Scott Meaney went the distance and the Minutemen swept the Rams back to Kingston, 7-1.

This afternoon, the Minutemen trek to the Green Mountain state to face the University of Vermont. This is a special game for Stone, who coached the Catamounts for five years before coming to UMass for the 1988 season.

"This is always a big game for them," Stone said. "I came here because this was a better situation for me, but they always want to prove me wrong."

Whalers look for respect

HARTFORD (AP) – The Hartford Whalers aren't used to winning playoff series, but coach Rick Ley has a feeling that could change.

The Whalers face the Bruins in Boston in the seventh game of their Adams Division semifinal series tonight. A victory would move the Whalers into the second round of the playoffs for only the second time in their 11-year NHL history.

"I'm confident we're going to win [tonight]," Ley said after watching videotapes of his team's 3-2 overtime victory over the Bruins on Sunday night. "You know, you get a feeling. We play well in Boston, and I think our team has a feeling. We picked up momentum from the game [Sunday] night."

But the Bruins, whose regular season record of 46-25-9 was best in the league, are not to be discounted.

"A seventh game, like any game, is going to have plenty of momentum swings once the game begins. Once it starts, I'm sure game six will be forgotten," coach Mike Milbury said after Sunday's loss.

The winner will meet Montreal, which advanced to the divisional final Sunday by eliminating Buffalo. That best-of-seven series begins Thursday.

Hartford doesn't have much NHL experience at winning in postseason play. Its best campaign was in 1985-86, when it beat Quebec in the Adams semifinal and lost the final to Montreal in seven games, the last one in overtime.

Ley knows his team lacks playoff experience. Boston, by comparison, has made the playoffs for 23 straight years and won two Stanley Cups in that time, in 1970 and 1972. The Bruins got to the finals in 1988 before losing to Edmonton.

"They've been there. They know how to play in games like that," Ley said. "That's the difference between them and us."

But he says the Whalers must break out sometime.

"Why Should I Register ...

(Peer Health promotion program)

Let Me Count The Whys.

1. I can earn three academic credits.
2. It can help me to meet lots of people.
3. It can help me to improve areas of my own health.
4. It can improve my chances of getting a job, because I will represent the University Health Services.
5. It will teach me skills valuable in any career like leading a workshop, giving a presentation and developing marketing strategies.
6. It can really help me be part of a team working to improve UMass.
7. It will teach me about important public health issues like sexually transmitted diseases and AIDS, cardiovascular illness, eating disorders, cancer, accident prevention, stress and consumer health.
8. In short, it might be the most important course I take while I'm a student at UMass.

If you are a creative and motivated student, pre-register now or call the Health Education Division, 549-2671 Ext. 181 for more information.

Class will meet Tuesdays and Thursdays 2:30 pm - 3:45 pm. There will be a Saturday training in September.

from Codignotto had the Gorillas on the rebound, much to the delight of the faithful Hill partisans who put off Easter weekend for an extra day.

Both Garber and Yale coach Karl Waldvogel could sense that UMass had momentum swinging in its favor, and a Yale fan noted that the Bulldogs had pulled similar collapses in the second half on several occasions this year.

But it wasn't to be this time. Who else but Mr. Reese stemmed the bleeding with a rocket into the top right corner, and Kim Dunn responded just 10 seconds later, picking up a loose ball in front of the goal after the faceoff and easily beating the defenseless Kellerman.

Bergan's second goal at 4:44 of the final quarter made it 17-13, but Yale wisely slowed matters down to hold the Gorillas off. Walter and Dunn capped the scoring late in the game.

Lax Facts: Strangely enough, the U.S. Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association poll was not released yesterday as expected. Chances are there won't be anyone challenging for the top two spots.

Yale, at 11-0, may start getting some number one votes before long, but it's not likely the 'Dogs will unseat the Canadian National Team from Syracuse, N.Y.

In other strangeness from this weekend, North Carolina had its Top Five spot jeopardized by losing to Atlantic Coast Conference rival Virginia. Also, Brown was unbeaten and ranked third in the nation until Yale got to the Bruins, 16-14 last Wednesday.

As of last night, no result was known for the Battle of the No. 1's between Syracuse and Div. III power Hobart. Likewise for Johns Hopkins (four straight losses) and Army. Maybe tomorrow.

Baseball enjoys a successful weekend

Minutemen thump Holy Cross after taking three from URI

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

After a year's absence from the Atlantic 10 tournament, the University of Massachusetts baseball team may be ready to make a return appearance.

And after sliding out of the picture in New England with a 17-27 mark last season, the Minutemen are starting to raise some eyebrows around the region.

UMass took three of four games from A-10 rival Rhode Island this weekend, and then followed it up by blasting Holy Cross, 14-3 yesterday afternoon at Lorden Field. In all, four wins in five tries spells a fairly successful weekend.

Against the Crusaders, who not long ago were ranked No. 1 in New England, the Minutemen (16-10) couldn't do much wrong.

"I enjoyed this game. We were in a groove out there," UMass coach Mike Stone said.

One of the things that had Stone pleased was another complete game performance from freshman righthander Daryle Corriveau. The fireballer went the distance for the second time in five days, allowing just three hits.

"Looking back to last week when we had eight games in five days, we needed a lot of complete games," Stone said.

But Corriveau's outing was somewhat overshadowed by a pair of hitting displays from senior first baseman Drew Comeau and sophomore shortstop Glenn DiSarcina, who had the best of the 14-hit UMass attack.

Comeau's line was pretty basic: 4-for-4, four doubles, four runs batted in. The four doubles may be a UMass record (it isn't kept anywhere), and his average jumped 38 points to a team-high .403 for his afternoon's work.

DiSarcina, meanwhile, was only 3-for-5, including a pair of home runs and six RBIs.

After Corriveau spotted the Cross a run in the first, UMass answered with four. Comeau and DiSarcina each had run-scoring hits, as did junior third baseman Ian Torres (2-for-4, 2 RBIs) and sophomore catcher Derek Dana (2-for-3, 2 RBI).

HC closed to 4-2 in the third with an unearned run, but an RBI single by Mike Tobin (2-for-3) in the fourth and DiSarcina's first dinger, a two-run job in the fifth, made it 7-2.

The Crusaders scratched for one more in the sixth before UM poured it on, Comeau cleaning the bases with a laser over the center fielder's head to make it 10-3. In the eighth, Dana's bases-loaded sacrifice fly preceeded DiSarcina's second trip 'round the bases, a three-run shot to right-center.

Against Rhode Island, UM split a pair on Friday and then swept on Saturday to improve to 7-1 in the A-10.

Sophomore righty Rich Graham went the distance in the opener, allowing five hits as the Minutemen grabbed a 3-1 win. Torres drove in a pair of runs.

Game two was the only glitch on an otherwise-solid weekend. The Minutemen got blasted by the Rams, 14-3.

"That was a good game for us, morale-wise," Stone said. "This is a young team, and sometimes they think they just have to show up."

The game got off to an ugly start when scheduled URI pitcher Steve Birkett got plunked in the nose by an errant pitch from John Russell. From there, it slowly got worse as UMass committed nine errors to help the Rams in their cause.

Birkett, nose broken in three places, returned to pitch on Saturday, but was greeted by Comeau's blast to dead-center field, a three-run shot in the bottom of the seventh that gave the Minutemen a 6-3 comeback win. Jerry Creamer pitched 2 1-3 innings to get the win in relief of

Undefeated Yale too much for Gorillas

Reese scores eight for Bulldogs in 19-13 win

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

Jon Reese feels that his best sport is football.

Judging by his performance in men's lacrosse Saturday afternoon at Boyden Field, that would be quite hard to fathom.

The senior All-America midfielder picked the University of Massachusetts apart with eight goals to lead second-ranked Yale University to a 19-13 win over the Gorillas.

UMass (5-2) hadn't lost to a New England opponent since this same Yale team prevailed in 1985, 11-10 in overtime. It had been 28 straight New England wins (and four regional titles as well) until Saturday.

Two years ago, Yale came into Boyden Field unbeaten as well, at 9-0. But in a wild contest, the Gorillas prevailed 20-13 to send the Bulldogs back to New Haven with their first setback.

This time around, it didn't quite work out that way.

Reese, who is a captain and strong safety for the Bulldog gridsters as well as captain of the lax team, will be entertaining hopes of being drafted into the National Football League later this month.

Whether he can play in the NFL remains to be seen, but consensus says he can plays for the Gorillas any time he wants.

Nothing can tarnish the way Reese and his Bulldog teammates played, though the feeling is that the Gorillas were subpar in their effort, especially on the defensive end.

UMass (5-2) has had trouble playing defensively this season, allowing double-digits against every opponent except weak-sister Providence since returning from Arizona. UMass coach Dick Garber felt that his team had been breaking down in transition.

"We've had trouble with our slides and our help defense," Garber said. "One-on-one, we'd been pretty good."

Against Yale it didn't really matter. Reese and Co. were attacking from every which way.

We wanted to spread them out and beat them 1-on-1," said Reese.

And the Bulldogs did just that, utilizing a whole lot of speed and some sniper-like shooting from various sources to offset any hopes of a Gorilla upset.

Another problem plaguing the Gorillas had been their over-aggressive play, resulting in dumb penalties. UMass did manage only five penalties.

One led to Yale's first goal, as Brian Walter (four goals) whipped one past UM goalie Ted Kellerman (11 saves) at 2:55. But Yale returned the favor moments later as senior attack Scott Hiller's man-up goal tied it at 3:56.

David Ryan and Reese countered before senior midfielder Jamie Bergan's tally made it 3-2. So far, no real reason to worry for the Gorillas, but that would be as close as they'd get the rest of the way.

Walter's second goal gave the Bulldogs a 4-2 edge after one. But four minutes later, it was 9-2 after a five-goal barrage that most agreed was the key to the game.

Reese played a starring role with two of the goals, and Jason O'Neill chipped in his three goals on the day to put UM in a big, big hole.

The Gorillas did their best to get out of it, though. Junior attack Jim McAleavey (three goals, three assists) and senior attack Rob Codignotto (four goals, assist) got the team rolling with a pair of goals, and freshman Mark Millon and senior midfielder Tim Soudan tallied once each to bring it to 12-8 at the half.

But Reese proved to be too much to overcome. After Hiller's second goal cut it to 12-9 early in the third, Clayton Simmers answered right back and Reese pumped home two more that had Yale right back in command, 15-9.

McAleavey's third goal and two more

Battle against budget cuts not over

By JULIE LIVINGSTONE
Collegian Staff

"It's a step by step process. If you give up, you don't win."
— Rep. Stan Rosenberg (D-Amherst)

University of Massachusetts students have been approaching budget cuts to public higher education as an attack on their future.

News Analysis

Since last year, students have been following a step-by-step process with rallies on their campuses and in Boston, marches, letter writing campaigns and phone calls to their legislators to ward off further budget cuts to their universities and colleges.

Two "days of action" were organized in January by the Student Government Association at Framingham State College. This was done with the hope of asserting the position of state university and college students on the budget cuts: "No more."

The first day was devoted to education in the classroom, the second was an opportunity for students to travel to the Statehouse to lobby legislators and join in a march and hear proponents of higher education.

Two-hundred and fifty students from the Amherst campus traveled to the Statehouse on Thursday, as compared with the turn-out of 3,000 last October.

Twenty buses were made available to the students at the Amherst campus through the sdministration, the Fund for the Future and the Student Government Association. Three buses were filled.

John Cole, president of the faculty union at UMass, explained last Thursday that the low turn-out from the Amherst campus might be because students from UMass are "tired" from fighting.

Some students at the rally attributed the day's low turn-out showing to professors who did not address the cuts in their lectures; some thought it was not publicized as greatly as previous acts against the cuts. Others countered that the information was available if students were interested.

In terms of success on Thursday, Chip Faulkner, associate director of Citizens for Limited Taxation, said students should be concentrating on cutting the "outrageously high salaries of University employees." He said students should form committees to investigate the wasteful spending of the University system, but he said he had no problem with rallies.

Rosenberg said many of the legislators were absent over the long weekend and said he did not personally hear discussion surrounding the action on Thursday. However, he said the media coverage of the event was excellent and must continue.

"You have to keep the pressure on the general public as well as the legislators. Thursday was extremely effective."

Russell Aims, a research analyst from Rep. Steven Pierce's (R-Westfield) office said the rally "raises the profile of what the students have been going through."

"The message is more compelling when the students themselves are here," Aims said. "We see they are giving up a day of classes. Some may laugh and say: 'They're cutting classes for a day.' This is not the case, students are making a real sacrifice by traveling to Boston."

Student Trustee Eric Nakajima said there is more work to be done on the Amherst campus for the remainder of the semester. "Fliers could be distributed to the residents through residential education programs or campus mail, updating them and explaining what efforts can be made [to preserve state public higher education]."

"Students are very sophisticated at this point in time as a result of all the facts they know," he said. "They are

Bromery next to look at question of GEO union

By MEREDITH O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

The question of Graduate Employee Organization union recognition now lies in the hands of Randolph W. Bromery, chancellor of Board of Regents of Higher Education.

Chancellor Duffey, who is also president of the University, and Provost O'Brien sent a memo to Bromery Friday asking for "the Board of Regents to authorize the campus administration to conduct an election of graduate student employees to select representation."

The GEO, which has been negotiating with the University to attain recognition of its affiliation with District 65/United Auto Workers, last week voted overwhelmingly to stage a "civil disobedience action" on April 24 if Chancellor Duffey does not accept their proposal for a "fast and fair" union election among graduate students.

Renee Heberle, co-spokesperson of the GEO, said GEO members plan to blockade the entrances to the Whitmore administration building.

If the GEO does not petition the Massachusetts Labor Relations Committee and the legal counsel of the Board of Regents do not grant the University the power to grant recognition, the University cannot allow unionization, the memo said.

Shrugging off allegations of "union busting," Duffey said if the Regents do not consent to unionization, GEO will have "to go by the certified route that other unions went" and petition the Labor Board.

Duffey rebutted GEO claims that his proposal for an election on union recognition was unacceptable because it required a majority of graduate students to participate.

Marc Kenen, GEO coordinator, said last week, "It is nearly impossible to get that kind of turnout."

Duffey, suggesting the GEO mail ballots to all eligible graduate students to attain a majority of votes, said, "It is not unreasonable to suggest that more than half of those [graduate students] affected by a union vote have a say in the decision."

Hoyle: No 'firebug' in Gorman

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts fire investigator said yesterday he does not suspect foul play in a trash room fire that caused $2,000 in damage to Gorman Residence Hall Saturday.

Keith E. Hoyle, chief fire prevention officer with the Environmental Health and Safety Office, said although he has not ruled out the possibility of foul play, there is no indication that the fire in the fourth floor trash room is suspicious.

The fire is the third to occur in the residence hall, located in the Central Residential Area, in the past two weeks. Two fires also occurred in the past three weeks in Cashin Residence Hall in the Sylvan Residential Area.

"We cannot say it is accidental or set at this point," Hoyle said. "We need to do further investigations with the help of Housing Services."

Amherst Fire Department Captain Al Tower Monday declared the fire suspicious because of the "multitude of fires in the same building."

Hoyle said preliminary evidence indicates that the fire started at the bottom of a trash barrel on wheels, called a "trash tote." Burn patterns on the trash tote further indicate that the fire started at the bottom, he said.

He said because investigators also did

Accident victim was drunk

Mangion's blood alcohol level was .165

Autopsy results for the 18-year-old University of Massachusetts freshman who died in an elevator accident in Kennedy Residence Hall March 11 show his blood alcohol was extremely high, authorities said yesterday.

Joel B. Mangion, of 1617 Kennedy Hall, had a blood alcohol content of .165 percent, said Jerome Wilder, supervisor of the Springfield Medical Examiner's office. In Massachusetts, a person is legally drunk with a BAC of .1 percent.

"He drank the equivalent of a case of beer," Wilder said.

Mangion died of multiple injuries after he fell off of the eighth floor crossbeam that runs between the two elevators in the shaft, said Karin Sherbin, University spokeswoman. Mangion apparently fell while reaching for a friend's hand, Sherbin said. His companion was not a UMass student, she said.

Dennis Madson, vice chancellor of Student Affairs, said the results come as no surprise to him. "This just shows that bad judgments are made when people have too much to drink," he said. "People are smart enough to know that climbing on an elevator is a dumb, stupid thing to do."

Madson said his staff is following an investigation into possible disciplinary and legal action against Mangion's companion in the shaft.

Along with increased emphasis on responsible drinking, a new policy is being formed to take action against anyone who "monkeys around with any campus safety devices," he said.

"Whenever there is direct evidence that anybody on campus is caught tampering with safety devices they will be asked to leave campus for a while," Madson said.

"This sort of thing just cannot be tolerated," he said.

Students, Weitzer to discuss S. Africa policy

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
Collegian Staff

Students concerned about recent violations of the University of Massachusetts' policy to divest from South Africa plan to meet today with a University administrator to discuss students' demands issued last week.

The meeting will be held in Vice Chancellor for University Relations and Development Deirdre A. Ling's office in the Whitmore Administration Building at 1:30 p.m.

Assistant Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs William H. Weitzer said he called the "informal" meeting to initiate dialogue between the administration and students who have voiced concern.

Eyad Kishawi, a senior engineering major who organized a rally Thursday to protest UMass investments in companies doing business in South Africa, said he is skeptical of the administration's motivation.

"The administration is only asking for a meeting to avoid embarrassment in the media," Kishawi said. "When he called us he said the meeting would be informal, no negotiations, just a dialogue concerning our demands."

Kishawi said at last week's rally that if the demands of students are not met by the administration "a massive escalation of force" will take place. The University's deadline to meet the demands passed Friday.

"If there are no results soon things will escalate definitely," Kishawi said.

Students have called for the resignation of Treasurer Robert H. Brand, whose office was to ensure that the University's investment managers did not buy stocks found on the Investors Responsibility Research Center list of South African-linked companies.

Other demands include: public access to monthly stock portfolios, the addition of the Africa Fund Unified list to the IRRC, UMass' divestment from all governments connected to South Africa and a campus-wide boycott of Coca-Cola products.

In response to the demands, Chancellor Duffey said last week the stocks found on the IRRC list were sold. But he said UMass will not divest from governments connected to South Africa because it does not violate UMass policy.

If UMass did divest from those governments, he said the University "couldn't buy U.S. bonds."

Duffey also said Brand will not resign, the Africa Fund Unified list will not be added to the IRRC because he said the latter is updated monthly and is efficient, and the monthly stock portfolios will be placed on reserve in the Main Library.

Two weeks ago it was discovered that the University held stocks in companies that do business in South Africa, in violation of the University policy which forbids such investments.

Students teach pupils about 'Plan It Earth'

By JOHN SUTTON
Collegian Correspondent

For the past three weeks, members of the MassPIRG chapter at the University of Massachusetts have been educating first and second graders at the South Hadley, Hadley and Belchertown elementary schools about the environment in a project called "Plan It Earth!"

"It went really well," said Kira Sanbonmatsu, MassPIRG environmental education coordinator, referring to a presentation the group made at the Marks Meadow Elementary School in Amherst. "The [UMass] students enjoyed it. The kids understood the presentation and took part in it," she said.

UMass and the elementary played a game similar to Pictionary, where they learned about the environment by drawing pictures of smoke, rain, trees and a human figure. After drawing the objects, pupils discussed how the objects interconnect. The smoke effects the rain that then harms trees and human beings, Sanbonmatsu explained to the students.

The pupils were broken into three environmental groups, recycling, clean air the pupils shared what they learned, Sanbonmatsu said.

MassPIRG members emphasized how pupils could recycle by reusing cups and plastic eating utensils and not buying things that will add further chaos to the environment.

"At first, I didn't know how it was going to go, but its going well now," said Jodi Bornstein, an elementary education major. "I think the kids are learning a lot. They already know a lot, but any reinforcement is good. It's good to learn at a young age."

Demonstrating the problem of landfill overflow, each pupil stood inside a circle they formed with string. They had to put their trash inside the circle until there was no room left.

"I've done this five times," said Jim Keck, a biochemistry major. "I try to involve the kids in a story about global warming and talk about the causes and effects and solutions for the problem of global warming."

Learning about environmentalism at a young age is like learning a foreign language, Keck said, because "it becomes ingrained in who you are."

Members of the University of Massachusetts chapter of MassPIRG set up a table yesterday and urged students to "take a pledge to clean up the environment." A rally is planned for tomorrow at noon on the Student Union Steps for Earth Week, which will culminate this Sunday with Earth Day.

Environmental rally today on SU steps

By LAVINIA GAMMON
Collegian Staff

"We want to get everyone revved up for Earth Week" said Angus McQuilken, student trustee-elect and rally organizer.

McQuilken said he hopes many people will attend the rally, scheduled for today at noon on the Student Union Steps.

"Even if they aren't really involved in environmental issues." The rally, sponsored by MassPIRG, will offer suggestions for individual action to aid the environment, he said.

"We want everyone to come and learn about what is happening to the environment and what they can do to help," said Kathy LeMay, an animal rights activist who will be speaking at the rally.

Also scheduled to speak at the rally will be Aaron Rome, MassPIRG co-chair and rally emcee. Rome said he plans to speak about corporate responsibility and the power of the consumer.

Rua Kelly, chair of Public Policy Committee of the Student Government Association plans to address the problem of the government's refusal to take action on environmental issues.

Student senator Maggie Magner plans to address the problem of pesticides and the California grape boycott.

Mark Maynaod plans to discuss the degradation of the Rainforest.

McQuilken said he will close the rally with suggestions for "what you can do"

"At the present we are facing many different environmental issues. We hope to get everyone enthusiastic towards dealing with these issues," he said.

Earth Day is Sunday, April 22.

Bikers to raise money for 'needs'

Escort service, child care and battered women to be aided

By KEITH NICHOLSON
Collegian Correspondent

Zeta Psi fraternity plans to bicycle from Pittsfield to the Massachusetts Statehouse to raise money to counteract state budget cuts to human services agencies.

The brothers expect to raise $5,000, which they will donate to the University of Massachusetts Escort Service, the UMass child care system, and Necessities/Necessidades, a battered women's shelter in Northampton.

The fraternity has scheduled the ride for April 20. Brothers plan to ride in shifts and expect to complete the 140-mile-trip to Boston in about 17 hours.

Local businesses have contributed close to $1,000. On the day of the ride, fraternity brothers plan to collect donations at a table on the Campus Center Concourse.

"The brothers of Zeta Psi feel that the Bike-a-thon is a great way to raise money for these important programs, which have been hurt by state budget cuts," said the coordinator of the event, Kurt Zwally.

The Escort Service of the Division of Public Safety provides escorts to students seven days a week from 5 p.m. to 3 a.m. Use of the program has been growing rapidly over the years with requests for escorts up to nearly 2,000 per month.

The University Child Care System serves children aged 15 months to five years. It provides University of Massachusetts students, staff and faculty, as well as Five College area families with day care services daily.

Necessities/Necesidades is an organization of women working to end violence and abuse against women and their children. Some of the services which Necessities/Necesidades provides are: a 24-hour hotline, legal advocacy, emergency safe homes, peer support groups, and child care and transportation. The status of these services/organizations is uncertain as a consequence of the state revenue reductions.

Easter becomes a Baker bong raid for police

By PRESTON P. FORMAN

Victims of Khmer Rouge remembered

By ALEXANDER NGUYEN
Collegian Staff

At noon yesterday 14 Cambodian students at the University of Massachusetts stood in silence with the Cambodian flag raised to commemorate the fall of the Republic of Kampuchea on April 17, 1975, and to mourn the loss of more than 2.5 million Cambodians as a result of the genocidal practices of the Khmer Rouge.

"I think it's really important for people to understand how Cambodian people have suffered from the communist regime. My father was killed because his brother opposed the communist regime," said Thy Oeur, a senior wood technology major.

Oeur said he doesn't understand why the U.S. government is supporting the Khmer Rouge, who he said are murdering the people of his country.

"This is a ceremony to remember those people who had experienced the unparallel suffering in the history of modern human kind," said Alex Chhung-Lip, a junior political science major.

"I think we're trying to not just let the world know but also to let the spirit of those who died know that we care and remember," he said.

Cambodian students remember victims of Khmer Rouge regime.

From 1975 to 1979, Cambodia was virtually destroyed by the genecidal practices of Pol Pot's Khmer Rouge (Red Khmer) regime. Urban populations were forced into the countryside to supply the labor needed to reform Cambodia into the ideal agricultural state the Khmer Rouge envisioned.

People considered to be from the bourgeois class, such as teachers, doctors, business people, students and supporters of former political regimes were illegally imprisoned, tortured and/or executed.

The remainder of the population was controlled by political fear and economic starvation, much of which was enforced by gun-toting children and teenagers whom the Khmer Rouge exploited to further their policies.

Families were separated and forced to work in slave-labor camps. It has been estimated that over 2.5 million people died of torture, execution, starvation and disease.

The Khmer Rouge regime came to a halt when the Vietnamese government invaded and occupied Cambodia in 1979.

Many of the Cambodian refugees resettled in Massachusetts and are rebuilding their lives after the physical and emotional loss of their home and families.

At UMass there are 27 Cambodian students. All of them said they have lost family at the hands of the Khmer Rouge.

April 17 will be remembered in Cambodian history as the beginning of the Khmer Rouge reign of terror, the students said.

"This is a day that every Cambodian should remember and tell their children about," he said.

Committee on human rights to give a lecture on Vietnam

By ALEXANDER NGUYEN
Collegian Staff

The Office of Third World Affairs will present the Vietnam Committee on Human Rights next Monday and Tuesday, April 23 and April 24 at the University of Massachusetts.

Vo Van Ai, committee founder and director, and Penelope J. Faulkner, president of international relations, are scheduled to speak to the campus community on human rights violations in Vietnam.

The Committee will hold a workshop on Monday, April 23, from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m. in CC Room 101. They will discuss the need for political empowerment of Vietnamese-Americans.

On Tuesday, April 24, the committee will give a lecture and discussion from 4 p.m. to 6 p.m. in CC Room 174-176. They will discuss the current status of the communist regime and it's relation to the boat people, women, children and workers' rights, the rights to freedom of thought, conscience and religion and other issues concerning human rights of the Vietnamese people.

They will also discuss the British government's forceful repatriation of refugees back into Vietnam.

The Vietnam Committee on Human Rights is based in Paris, and is on a United States college speaking tour.

The Committee regularly reviews all major Vietnamese newspapers and also reviews refugees' statements on human rights violation. Based on these sources the committee filed complaints against the government of Vietnam before the United Nations in 1985, charging that the government had illegally imprisoned more than 500,000 political prisoners.

Since then the committee's cry for redress has found support from various governments condemning the Vietnam government's violations of human rights.

Asian-American students present 7th 'Asian Night'

By ALEXANDER NGUYEN
Collegian Staff

The Asian American Students' Association (AASA) of the University of Massachusetts will present their "Seventh Annual Asian Night: The Year of the Horse," this Friday from 6:30 p.m. to 10 p.m., and they will give a dance finale from 10 p.m. to 2 a.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Asian Night's program includes traditional Chinese, Laotian and Cambodian dance, Karnatak music, Kendo stick fighting, piano and cello recital and a contemporary fashion show, followed by a dance finale.

"Asian Night is the largest and most popular event displaying Asian talent and humor of the Asian community at the UMass campus," said AASA president Tom Truong.

In past years Asian Night has drawn large audiences of over 800. "This year AASA students and friends continue the tradition of exciting and colorful tradtional and contemporary entertainment," said Truong.

"During the academic school year AASA presents various events such as sports tournaments and dances to raise funding for Asian Night. This year we also worked with Five-college AASA's to bring the East Coast Asian Student Union conference to the Five-college area," he said.

"Asian Night is something we have much pride and joy in giving to the Five-college community, it is free to everybody and is fully accessible to the handicapped," he said.

Cambodians ring in the new year: 2534

By ALEXANDER NGUYEN
Collegian Staff

The Cambodian Community of Western Massachusetts will be presenting "The Annual Cambodian New Year Celebration" this weekend at Amherst Junior high school. Admission and food are free.

The Celebration will commence on Friday at 6 p.m. with religious prayers and scriptures.

On Saturday at 8 a.m. there will be traditional religious ceremonies, food offerings and praying sessions.

During the day there will be art and craft shows leading into dinner at 6 p.m. at which time special guests will receive appreciation for their support of the Cambodian community.

After the dinner there will be traditional dance, music and fashion. The Celebration will close with a dance party ending at midnight.

"The Cambodian New Year Celebration is in April because it is the end of the harvest season and is when our people relax after a long season of hard work. It is also a time to welcome a new angel, this year being the year the angel rides in on a horse," said Alex Chhung-Lip, president of the UMass Cambodian Students' Association.

Chhung-Lip said the Celebration provides an opportunity for Cambodian people to come together to preserve our heritage and to have a good time.

"It is also a rare opportunity for people of other cultures to learn, experience and appreciate Cambodian people and their culture," he said.

"The Cambodian community appreciates all the support we've received from various organizations in Western Massachusetts," Chhung-Lip said.

"I hope the people who have given us so much are getting as much back in return," he said.

Asia center exhibits a photo-documentary

By ALEXANDER NGUYEN
Collegian Staff

The United Asia Cultural Center in Knowlton Residence Hall at the University of Massachusetts is exhibiting a photograghic documentary, Southeast Asians: A Matter of Survival, through May 10.

The exhibit showcases photographs by Bill Burke, James Higgins, Joan Ross and Nate Thayer, of Southeast Asian refugees along the Thai/Cambodian border and resettled refugees in Lowell.

The exhibit depicts the everyday life and struggle of a people trapped in a time of war, hunger and political unrest.

The photographs reveal the plight of the Southeast Asian people from war and poverty. In the faces of the people can be seen fear, confusion, loss and anger. At the same time they reveal strength, pride and family unity.

Bill Burke has made three trips to the Thai/Cambodian border since 1982. He is preparing a book on his Asian misadventures called Asia Journal with pictures from Burma, Thailand and Cambodia.

James Higgins and Joan Ross have documented the city of Lowell for the past seven years. Their collection of photographs and oral histories has resulted in the publication of two books.

The most recent, Southeast Asians — A New Beginning in Lowell is translated into Khmer, Laotian and Vietnamese. It documents refugee resettlement in the Lowell area.

Nate Thayer is a student of contemporary Cambodian political affairs. He spent time on the Thai/Cambodian border from 1984 to 1985 researching Khmer politics.

The exhibit is open during cultural center hours and is free to the public. More information is available at 545-1844.

DID YOU KNOW

There is a way to obtain a commission as a Marine Officer other than through ROTC called the Platoon Leaders Class (PLC).

The PLC program does not interrupt your academic career.

The PLC program is open to all qualified underclassmen.

The PLC program requires no special classes, uniforms or drills on campus.

The PLC program is totally voluntary with no commitment to full-time active duty unless you want it.

If qualified you can be guaranteed flight training as a Marine Officer.

Your starting salary as a Marine officer could be between $18,000 and $23,000 depending on when you enter the program.

If you would like more information about the PLC program, please contact the Marine Corps Officer Selection Office.

An employee without rights

Marc D. Rubinfeld

I have been a graduate student and a Teaching Assistant for the past two years.

As a Teaching Assistant, I am a worker. I do a job. I work hard.

My labor provides a service for this University that it can not do without.

By any reasonable definition then, I am an employee.

But under the existing system, I am an employee without any rights. The University can fire me on a whim.

They can cut my wages, change my job description or increase my work load. They can promise me the moon one month, squeeze all the work they can out of me, then tell me the next month that the money no longer exists to continue to employ me.

This fight for a graduate students' union is not about greedy students asking for the moon; it is about hard-working employees requesting some voice in their working conditions.

Under the current system — without a union, collective bargaining or a contract to enforce promises — any promises are meaningless.

We need a viable union because the existing system is not a good one, and graduate student employees can no longer afford the broken promises that have littered 12 years of this struggle for collective bargaining rights.

Under the existing system supported by the "benevolence of our current benefactors," we are paid poverty wages during the eight years it takes to go from a bachelor's degree to a Ph.D.

Many of us have families to support. And even those that don't must struggle to live on the 5,000 to 7,000 dollars a year that our jobs are paying us.

We receive no cost of living allowances nor have we had a raise in over three years.

We receive no health benefits, and the money we must pay for our health insurance has been climbing each year.

And on top of all that, while we are spending 20 hours a week on our Teaching and Research Assistant jobs (as opposed to nine hours a week in classroom seminars), we are denied the right to be even considered employees.

Through a twist of logic, we have been called students first and workers secondary.

And as a final irony to this blatant deceit, while Joseph Duffey and the Board of Regents continue to arrogantly label us not "really employees," the Commonwealth of Massachusetts orders us to pay state income tax on the wages that we receive, deducts federal and state taxes from our paychecks, issues us yearly W-2 statements, and has us write in on the tax forms the words Teaching Assistant or Research Assistant in the space for occupation.

Mr. Duffey, most graduate student employees like being here. We like many things about this school.

We are committed to the jobs that we are doing.

We hope to continue to work towards making this school the best school it can possibly be.

All we are asking is that you recognize us for who we are and the work that we do.

Please, no more promises. You can keep the moon.

Give us a viable union instead so we can negotiate with you fair and equitable working conditions where all rights are protected.

Students perpetuating reputation

Your coverage of the April 12 budget cut rally in Boston omitted several facts of interest to the UMass community.

Most importantly, you failed to mention the lack of participation by UMass students. According to an article in the Springfield Union-News, 16 of the 20 buses chartered by UMass organizations were sent back empty.

While I trust that the aforementioned omissions were unintentional and will be addressed in your next issue, the facts themselves are inexcusable.

For several years now, I have noted the fundamental inadequacies of student leaders. Perhaps now it is time to acknowledge the fundamental inadequacies of UMass students.

Perhaps morning reruns of Wheel of Fortune are more appealing than a bus ride starting at the ungodly hour of nine a.m. Perhaps the majority of UMass students don't care whether their parents are ripped off to the tune of thousands of dollars over the next couple of years.

Perhaps the stereotype of UMass as a safety school for children who haven't got the brains or the backbone to get in anywhere else isn't too far off the mark. Perhaps it is time to admit that this campus is a haven for lazy, middle-class slugs whose only goal in life is to consume more than their share of the world's resources.

I hope not.

Perhaps some people will say that participation was low because protest rallies simply aren't effective. If so, I suggest they find a more effective alternative and promptly set about it. A school's reputation depends on its students as much as its budget. And right now, UMass students look to me like a bunch of patsies.

Filibuster necessary to prove urgency of fee increase

Chambers/Dreyfus

For the last two weeks there has been a filibuster in the Undergraduate Student Senate to prevent legislation from reaching the floor.

As elected student leaders and members of the filibustering minority, we feel that we have an obligation to explain to the issue at hand.

Because of the current financial crisis, the state will no longer pick up the costs for retirement and health benefits of state employees whose salaries are paid out of trust funds. This means that the student government must find some way to cover the benefit costs of the 26 professional staff people whose salaries are paid from the Student Activities Trust Fund.

The Student Government Association must either make cuts or ask the Board of Trustees to raise the Student Activities Fee or it will incur a deficit of about 180,000 dollars next year.

The administration is using this financial crisis as an opportunity to restructure the student government to better suit administrative purposes.

The Senate leadership and the administration have proposed a plan that would take that money away from the Board of Governors, the Commuter Area Government, and the Southwest Area Government. Under this plan each of these bodies would be forced to give up about 70-80 percent of their present operating budgets. This will effectively eliminate any power these groups once had, which means the administration will have to contend with only one centralized "power" — the SGA.

Ironically, the SGA has refused to cut even a single dollar from its annual budget of nearly $200,000, probably because almost half of this money goes to paying salaries of elected student government officials. If this issue ever comes to a vote on the Senate floor, you can guess which way they will be going.

The administration has already conceded that there will be a "massive increase" in the Student Activities fee next year. This means that it will probably go up $40 or $50. Unfortunately, occasional increases in the fee are inevitable because of a mandatory five percent cost of living increase every year.

The SGA leadership has said that it would be "absurd" to ask for an increase in the Student Activities fee at a time when the student government should be fighting fee increases.

The truth is that the Undergraduate Student Senate approved the SGA Rents and Fees Committee report that endorsed almost all of the new fee increases proposed by the Board of Trustees.

Essentially, the SGA is telling the Board that it is okay for them to raise all of the other fees except for their own. The SGA is trying to rationalize their own ineffectiveness in fighting fees by committing fiscal suicide.

If the SGA is to continue to function as a government that provides services and programming, then it must have the money to do so. The administration has already said that the fee will be raised next year.

We want the Senate leadership to recognize their obligations to the students and abandon the administration's plan.

The fee should be raised this year, and we will continue to filibuster the plan until they are willing to make some concessions.

Irish Supreme Court ruling reveals political reality

Jim Dee

On April 6 the Irish Supreme Court ruled that persons wanted by the British for actions against the state in Northern Ireland cannot be extradited from the Republic of Ireland if their crimes are politically motivated.

The Court's ruling has underscored the reality that political violence in Northern Ireland can only end via negotiations between the two major warring factions — the British and the Irish Republican Army (IRA).

The ruling has been a major defeat for Margaret Thatcher, who has refused to negotiate, trying instead to portray the IRA's anti-colonial struggle as a criminal conspiracy. More importantly, the daily occurrence of British Army violence against Irish civilians can now be seen for what it is: political repression.

The Irish Supreme Court also cited the fact that Irish men and women are frequently beaten to extract "confessions" of offenses related to the war in Northern Ireland.

Last October, as the result of world-wide pressure on the British government, four Irish prisoners dubbed the Guildford Four, were finally released after spending 15 years in jail. Their convictions had been based solely on "confessions," which they later recanted in court, claiming that they were severely beaten and forced to sign the confessions.

In recent weeks the plight of the Birmingham Six, also jailed since 1974, has been brought to world attention. The Birmingham Six were also beaten, and recanted their forced "confessions" in court. But in this case, the prosecution also claimed that nitro-glycerine "residue" was found on some of the accused. However, independent forensic tests have shown the same residue is also produced by cigarette smoke and ordinary household cleansers.

Like the Guildford Four, the Birmingham Six's main crime was that of being Irish in the wrong place, at the wrong time.

These prisoners were jailed in Britain. In Northern Ireland, judicial abuses are far greater. In addition to being routinely beaten in interrogation centers, suspects can be jailed for up to seven days without being charged.

In December 1988 the European Commission on Human Rights found that this practice was in violation of its charter, which Britain has signed. Britain has ignored the ruling.

When a prisoner is brought to court, there is one judge, no jury, and convictions can be obtained on the word of a senior police officer alone.

Furthermore, since October 1988, the right to silence, a fundamental principle of law, is no longer guaranteed in Northern Ireland. These same courts, from 1981 through 1983, allowed convictions of up to 40 people per trial, based on the word of one paid police informant.

Finally brought to an end only after enormous international pressure, Nationalists fear these show trials could begin again at any time.

Lastly, it must be pointed out that the U.S. government is not innocent. An IRA volunteer has said that Joe Doherty is in a maximum-security detention center in New York.

Britain's requests for Doherty's extradition have been denied by four U.S. judges on the grounds that Doherty's "crimes" were political. Despite the rulings, both the Reagan and Bush Justice departments have kept Doherty in jail, by filing repeated appeals. Meanwhile Doherty, denied bail, has been under 24-hour lock-up for seven years, with only five hours weekly exercise. He has never been accused of a crime in the United States.

It can only be hoped that the recent actions of the Irish Supreme Court will heighten awareness of the plight of Irish political prisoners everywhere. With a rise in global awareness, prospects for a lasting resolution of the conflict in Northern Ireland can only rise as well.

very clear on the fact that they want a definite way to go about things."

UMass students have become more sophisticated throughout the years, even more so throughout these past two semesters. It appears necessary to force the public into facing that the future of the state is at stake.

Students can create only so much energy to rally and protest, and take only so much time from their studies to fight for that right. Now is the time for many of Massachusetts' leaders to believe students will one day be in their position, and it is selfish of them to withhold the means to obtaining their future.

Or as Rep. Rosenberg says, "If you stop fighting, you lose."

ministration, said Duffey's proposal for majority graduate student participation is fair. "In the presidential election, a majority of electoral votes are required."

Pearson, who is heading the University negotiations with the GEO, said the 1979 Massachusetts Labor Relations ruling that denied union recognition to graduate students is still binding.

In a letter sent to Duffey earlier this month, John R. McKeon, director of the Massachusetts Office of Employee Relations, said, "I think it is apparent that the [Labor] Commission's decision, in spite of its vintage, is controlling, and thus poses an insurmountable obstacle to the voluntary recognition requested by GEO."

"We are waiting for a definitive answer [from Promery] on giving union recognition," Pearson said.

Heberle said the GEO is tired of the administration 'passing the buck again."

"No matter what anyone says, whether it be the Board of Regents or anybody, we stand by our claim that it is legal for the University to recognize us and that the [Labor Relations] 1979 ruling does not prohibit union recognition," she said.

Heberle called the 1979 ruling political. "It is quite clear that they have no intention to allow us to unionize," she said.

not find any evidence of an accelerant such as lighter fluid at the scene, it is likely that fire was started accidentally from cigarette butts found in the trash tote or from another cause.

"If someone is going to start a fire they are going to light the top of the pile and it's going to burn down," he said. "There is no indication that this occurred."

Hoyle discounted residents' fear that there is a "firebug" living in the residence halls.

"I realize that the fires are making people anxious but we don't think there is a 'firebug,'" he said. "We have no indications at this point that there is one running around."

The first fire, which occurred April 3 in the first floor trash room, has been deemed accidental because of careless disposal of smoking materials, Hoyle said.

He said the student responsible for this fire was also the student who accidentally knocked a lit candle to the floor on April 4, causing the second fire.

Hoyle said the student has been expelled from the residence hall.

Eighteen fires were reported in University buildings and housing in 1989, Hoyle said, noting that this is a decrease from 27 fires reported in 1988.

Public Enemy: brilliant controversy

● 'Terrordome' album is terrific

By SAAD HOPKINS
Collegian Staff

Fear Of A Black Planet
Public Enemy
Def Jam records
******

By tradition I have always favored earlier releases because I feel that there is more creative input. By the time a band's third album is due, one can hear the signs of burn out. But it's simply impossible for P.E. to make a bad, or even mediocre, record. In short, P.E.'s philosophy is if you burn, or sell out, you "Git the hell out!" Fear Of A Black Planet is P.E.'s ultimate masterpiece of terror. A very much needed and effective weapon for America's Black youth today.

When It Takes A Nation Of Millions... first came out in the summer of '88, it was a timeless record. No one would have thought that it would be so ingenious. Hardly any other record had made such a powerful impact. But now Fear Of A Black Planet, after months of delay, has come out and topped both records twice and then some.

The first eight songs puzzled me. They were different, raw and the beats were unusual. But then comes "Burn Hollywood Burn," and that's when you feel the explosion. "Many intelligent Black men seemed to look uncivilized when on the screen/Like a guess I figure you to play some jigaboo/On the plantation, what else can a nigger do?/And Black women in this profession/As for playin' a lawyer out of the question/For what they play Aunt Jemima is the perfect term." This song features cameos from Ice Cube (of ex-N.W.A. fame), and Big Daddy Kane. And who would think that Ice Cube would be down with the P.E.?

The song "Fear Of A Black Planet" addresses the issues of White reluctance of inter-mingling, and the fear of Black people in general, "Excuse me for the news/I question those accused/Why is this fear of Black from White influence who you choose?" P.E. attacks the hesitation of adding some color in the family tree.

The roller coaster ride doesn't stop there. "Revolutionary Generation" pays heartfelt homage to the Black woman. A figure often ignored in rap music (apart from subjecting them to exploitation and humiliation). Black women are among the strongest on earth. For America to have treated her the way she has is appalling, and P.E. are quick to note this, "They disrespected mama and treated her like dirt/America took her, reshaped her, raped her/Nope it never made the paper." This is a serious turn for P.E., a political advancement worth noting because on the whole, our sisters have been treated badly. Of course, anyone with a conscious knows this. But few know to what extent certain closed-minded Americans have stripped her; of her identity and of her humanity. Some of you reading this may not care. But just remember, it's because of people like you that bands like Public Enemy exist, and they ain't goin' away!

Now comes the question that some of those influenced by the media are going to ask: "Is it anti-Semitic?" No! And I will jump to defend that. Those who accuse them of anti-Semitism must first realize that P.E. are a band that have done more positive things for society than negative. Prof. Griff, the one everyone accuses of being insensitive, has permanently left the group. The one line from "Welcome To The Terrordome," "Crucifixion ain't no fiction/So called chosen frozen/Apologies made to who ever pleases/And now they got me like Jesus." is merely questioning the role of Jews in the African slave trade. Admittedly, the line "And now they got me like Jesus" strongly suggests that the Jews killed Jesus. I've chosen to ignore it in light of what P.E. have done recently to improve relations between Jews and Blacks. However, you may interpret it as you may.

Apart from this record probably being the best record of the year, P.E. have also put themselves in the Black hall of fame. They are a true chapter in Black history. This record should be played to every person in America. It's the most progressive record released by Black artists in the past 10 years! Beautiful.

Albums are rated from one to five stars, with five stars being the highest rating. Six stars means you must buy it.

● Band no enemy without Griff

On May 22 of last year, Professor Griff, then the Minister of Information for the controversial rap group Public Enemy, held an interview with a journalist from the Washington Post. He strongly expressed his views on Jews, and their questionable role with Africans, African Americans, and the (in Griff's eyes) negative effect on the social and economic state of affairs. The Post was happy to print this, setting him up to be a hedonistic anti-Semite. This sparked outrage amongst all Jewish communities in America, as well as Western Europe. Mordechei Levi and the Jewish Defense League flipped out in particular.

Saad Hopkins

So much static was caused that Public Enemy nearly broke up, which would have been the ultimate tragedy. If we, Jews and Gentiles alike, would actually listen to their music, we would find that P.E. have done more to lift the voices and consciousness of all, (not just African Americans), than to promote hate. However the general attitude was that P.E. were anti-Semitic when all Griff was trying to say was instead of constantly looking at the glorious side of the roles in Jewish history, look at some of their more questionable acts. Look at their role in the African slave trade.

Griff's delivery upset me, but the man had a right to say what he believes. Unfortunately there are a lot of Jews in this world who are racist, especially in places such as South Africa, and pockets of Long Island where, sadly enough, Black Jews such as myself aren't even allowed in certain congregations. And by the Post printing what they did, and by Griff saying what he said (in the manner of which he said it), certain stereotypes and fears between Jews and African Americans were only reinforced.

I will not tolerate journalists exploiting people who harbor alternative views, neither will I tolerate any anti-Semitism or racism of any kind. It's pointless and, above all, stupid. However, I let Griff off the hook concluding that he needed to be educated more about Jews, and their more positive sides, recognizing their importance and worthy contributions.

But Griff has been reluctant to want to understand Jews. A month ago, he outwardly attacked MC Search of the White, half-Jewish rap group 3rd Bass, calling him a "...Fucking Jew bastard." His reasons for doing this were lame and, as a result, I have washed my hands clean of him. Griff is practicing exactly what he attacks on records. Why? Why all this hate?

Griff said this because he was apparently upset with part of 3rd Bass's Gas Face video, in which their S1W (Security of the First World) auxilary unit was parodied. Paranoia and reaction, not response, took over, causing Griff to do damage. Instead of turning to racial slurs, why didn't he just say: "Yo, I don't like the way you're makin' fun of my posse."? Matter over mind.

3rd Bass aren't an act worthy of this hostility. They are among the most socially conscious and politically active trio around. They preach the sort of unity between groups that is essential for their survival. Their name makes this evident. "We want to merge the three major conflicting religions: Christianity, Judaism and Islam. Bring them to a common ground, a common base."

I couldn't agree more. I'm sick of high figures such as Jewish Defense League member Mordechei Levi telling me that I'm a traitor to my own people for not endorsing the wishy-washy policies of Israel, in light of their "non-defensive" treatment toward Palistinians. And I'm sick of misinformed brothers like Griff telling me I should be ashamed of being Jewish. As I said, this is a load of crap.

Prof. Griff has a solo album out called Pawns In The Game. You should know about this because it's certainly going to cause some friction. Although I haven't heard the record, I intend to, and will listen carefully with an unbiased ear. However, you should also note that Prof. Griff has left Public Enemy, on his own accord, as Minister of Information. Make sure that you don't allow the media hype to influence your opinion. It's all up to you.

CONDOM MAN TO THE RESCUE — A scene from "Everything You Thought You Knew About Sex And Much More" playing at the Hampden Theater tonight, at 8 p.m. Presented by The Not Ready for Bed Time Players, the performance, geared towards giving people a better understanding of sex and AIDS, is free to the public.

'Aunt Dan' is no lemon

By JOSH GALITSKY
Collegian Staff

The UMass Theater Department has a bit of a notorious reputation for never shying away from the controversial. This semester's production is no exception, as Aunt Dan and Lemon takes the stage this week.

Aunt Dan and Lemon is an unorthodox, often shocking play that stirs political ideology and questions the whole concept of human morality. Although each audience member is granted free will to decipher the play's internal meaning, the bulk of the play is devoted to exploring the complex subjects of public and private morality.

The storyline of the play, if one can clearly be identified, is a conversation between Lemon, an ailing, impressionable young woman who hails pro-Nazi views, and her Kissinger-adoring Aunt Dan, a peculiar political ponderer and past friend of Lemon's family. Through extended monologues and strange admissions of political lust and sexual abandon, Aunt Dan defies customary playwriting and gives its audience a psychological feast to chew upon.

Amidst titillating scenes and frenzied speeches is the contention by some that the play's viewpoint is a conservative, one-sided spectacle. Along with this criticism is the complaint that although the characters sometimes speak their rhetoric reasonably, they are illogical, preposterous fools.

Wallace Shawn, the playwright, is the first to admit to the play's unconventional nature. Shawn, in a New York Times interview, said, "I think it's more interesting not to put my own attitudes into the play, which would allow the audience to go home satisfied. The audience has to react to this play, otherwise it's a disaster. If they sit there like a piece of cheese, it would be a horrible experience."

Shawn has attempted to write an audience-provoking work that strips the viewers of their cushiony opinions and forces them to wrestle with their own sense of morality and social tranquility. In light of Shawn's notions that morality is a double-edged sword of necessity and inevitable discomfort, the audience is left to decipher between their personal views of the "Hitler in all of us," and our need for some safeguard for all of humanity.

Directed by Josh Perlstein, this haunting play is sure to leave its audiences with much to talk about.

Aunt Dan and Lemon runs through April 21 at the UMass Curtain Theater at 8 p.m. There will be a 2 p.m. showing on the 21st. Tickets are $4 for general public, $3 students and senior citizens.

Colorful 'Whitewash' examines bigotry without preaching

By NICK OSTIS
Collegian Correspondent

Whitewash
Amherst College
Saturday, April 14

In a dramatic context it's frequently difficult to point out injustice and present solutions without being preachy, pretentious or dogmatic — especially on a subject as complex and deep-rooted as bigotry.

Amherst College professor Douglas Anderson and composer Tom Marshall mostly elude that thorny obstacle in their compelling, tragi-comic rock musical Whitewash, based on a synthesis of several true-life racial confrontations which have occurred on campuses across this nation.

The setting is a prestigious, mostly White college in rural New England forced to confront the open wounds and seething needs of an intelligent, emotional, multiracial student body determined to be heard, understood and accepted with no compromise.

The musical opens with a couple of classic soul hits — Jr. Walker's "Shotgun" and James Brown's "I Feel Good." Through the gaps in the multi-tiered stage, the audience can see the cast dancing and gyrating in the background as the all-White band rocks on. I couldn't help but think this is a play about racism and all the actors of race are "in the back of the bus again."

However, it's not long before the actors seize the stage and infuse the wit and poignancy of Anderson's script (and lyrics) and Marshall's sprightly eclectic pop sounds ("My music," he calls it) with their own fiery convictions. Many of them base their roles on their own travails in prejudice's demonic den. In fact, in the workshops preceding the play, they contributed key insights.

The play focuses particularly on Dee (UMass' Kim Zombik), a high-strung, outspoken Black female, who resents the attitudes (often tacit) of the campus community. She sees society's evil magnified there and rails to her counselor, "It's not me, it's the system." Later, he sheds his professional demeanor briefly to divulge to her the similar pain he felt 15 years before right here trying to slay the same dragons plaguing her now.

When she secretly paints "Nigger, Go home" on her dorm room door, the whole town — the cops and local populace, college administration, media and students — is turned upside-down as the perpetrator is sought. Jack (Pete Rosenmeier), a sensitive White student who continually tries to befriend Dee, hides the hotly-hunted door under his friend's bed, explaining to his shocked buddy, "You're a poli-sci major. Nobody will suspect you of activism."

In the ensuing action, many brave people storm through that "door" to be forever changed. Indeed, when Jack's conniving friend warns him, "You're risking your life here," he responds, "Maybe that's the idea." Also, the star Latino halfback Luis A. Taveras resigns from the football team on the eve of a big game to lodge his solidarity with Dee, only to be frustrated when the team crushes its opponents without him.

Lest you think this play is about platitudes and easy answers, it's not. The saucy, salty dialogue — often confrontational — is absolutely believable to the last word and could have been taped verbatim any place on campus.

Douglas's colorful characterizations of the campus snack bar women, a sort of Greek chorus, and the local police chief are both incisive and generous, while his profiles of the faculty are devastatingly comical, particularly a scene in which prim Dr. Byrd (Margaret Duffy) elaborates eruditely on censorship in art as background screens show fig leaves covering genitalia on famous works of art. Her meticulous rendering of the esoteric dialogue is sparkling.

Equally entertaining is the traditional tea which generations of students have faithfully attended (against their wills) at the president's house. The percussive raising and lowering of cups against the saucers and the merry innuendo among the cast is precious.

Douglas bites the hand that feeds him, too. In one scene an actor questions the college's commitment to the community and asserts they should be helping out in town instead of sequestered on campus reading so much.

There are several show stopping tunes: "Something Ugly Going Down Here," "Bullshit In Your Backyard" and one in which the whole cast drums with sticks against the staging in a spirited exorcism of hate.

In the final analysis, though, it's Dee's show. When she reaches within the belts out, "What You Need Is What You're Looking At," I had to agree.

The six man band, including two honking saxes and loose Andy Boose on guitar, melded confidently in a joyous crescendo on the Staples' "I'll Take You There" with the full cast exuberantly working the delighted audience.

Marley, Femmes headline pond

UPC announced last night that Ziggy Marley and the Melody Makers will be headlining this year's pond concert with alternative favorites Violent Femmes.

East of Eden will open the show.

Two other as yet unconfirmed bands will also perform.

According to UPC Programming Coordinator Ari Weinstein, UPC may run into a deficit since Southwest Area Government pulled $10,000 they had verbally agreed to give UPC. All other area governments have kept their verbal promises. Weinstein said the Student Government Association may have to bail UPC out.

SAWG President Bob Monaghan could not be reached for comment.

UPC has confirmed a Bluewall show for April 27. The acts are the Feelies and MTV Unplugged host Jules Shear. Tickets are $3 for UMass students and $5 for everyone else. There will be a cash bar.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES(March 21-April 19): Vulnerable teen-agers need encouragement, not criticism. Show that you are behind them all the way. A financial setback is temporary. Have more faith in yourself. Repay past favors.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20): A business situation will turn around soon. The perfect job may be right under your nose. New deals produce the cash you need. Your social connections give you added clout. Do some entertaining.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20): Athletes win awards and position themselves to receive college scholarships. An overly protective attitude can make offspring resentful and rebellions. Loosen the apron strings.

CANCER(June 21-July 22): Keep your own counsel until an appointment becomes official. Otherwise, the tide could turn against you. Stay with any diet or exercise resolutions Give serious thought to vacationing alone.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22): Contracts signed now bring golden financial rewards. Act in you own best interest. Although business opportunities abound, you must take the initiative. The same is true in romance. Go for it!

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22): Romance has you walking on air. Your self-confidence returns. Make your decisions stick. The boss insists that you settle down and produce. Someone in school makes an important discovery. Be supportive.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22): Be careful not to antagonize those you will need on your team. Straight answers will impress the people who really count. Business entertainment pays off handsomely. Reserve more time for family life.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21): Although your eccentricity drives some family members to distraction, it cheers and amuses others. Let your mate know the depth of your affection. A youngster looks to you for guidance. Be honest.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21): Your sweetness is part of your power. Be tactful when dealing with someone who is difficult. A brilliant investment plan is offered for your consideration. Act immediately.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19): Family members claim your attention. A long-distance trip may not live up to your expectations. Look on the bright side. Romance takes a giant step forward. You make all the right choices.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18): Make the most of a fresh start. You will emerge victorious from a stormy encounter if you keep your temper in check. Mate raises questions that must be answered. Do not feel intimidated.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20): Good things are about to happen. Make the most of an unusual business opportunity. All forms of communication are favored. Mixed economic trends could work in your favor. Romance is iffy.

Marathon great for runners, busy for doctors

BOSTON (AP) — As expected, thousands of people flocked to the 94th running of the Boston Marathon. But it was a perfect day for watching, not running.

With sunny skies and temperatures in the 60s, crowds thronged to the traditional running of the 26.2 mile race. But the gorgeous weather meant trouble for many runners.

About 1,000 runners were treated in the Marathon's medical tent, complaining of heat exhaustion, muscle cramps or blisters an dehydration.

Dr. Bruce Jones, a medical volunteer and former marathon runner, said he had developed a formula that uses the temperature, humidity and the number of entrants to calculate how many runners will need treatment.

His statistics indicated about 900 to 1,100 people would require medical attention on the 94th running of the 26.2 mile-race, close to the actual figure.

With an average temperature of 62, a cloudless sky and low humidity, Jones said he considered it a hot day for the marathon. The sunshine and the light breeze would feel good to runners at the start, but the heat would creep up on runners who did not pace themselves, he said.

Many runners brought to the tent did complain of the heat. But they also said they were grateful for the spectators who flocked to the race and cheered the runners on.

Steve Kendell, 27, of Fairfax, Va., finished the marathon but was led into the medical tent, his eyes glazed, legs trembling and his mouth mechanically gulping water. After about 10 minutes his eyes came into focus, and he was able to smile at the nurses who congratulated him on his finish.

It was his 14th marathon, his seventh in Boston, and he blamed the heat for falling four minutes short of his desired time, finishing at 2:29:30.

He said the crowds at this race were memorable. "I didn't see any sparse spots," he said.

"I think for the crowd, the weather was ideal," he said. "The people made it great. I heard a lot people yelling my name. It makes you feel that much better."

Another finisher, 32-year-old Molly Tyson of Charleston, said the large crowds spurred her on to her best time in seven years of running the marathon.

"People were standing there with newspapers and as I go by I heard them chant 'MOLLY. MOLLY.' I'm wondering, how did they get my name?" Tyson said.

About 3:30 p.m., the medical tent was beginning to resemble a M.A.S.H. unit, with shouts about incoming casualties and a plaintive request on the sound system, "Does anyone here speak Greek?"

The staff had prepared for the onslaught. The tent was stocked with 300 pounds of chopped ice, 40 gallons of tea and bouillon, 10,000 cartons of yogurt and three computers for storing the medical records of those treated, according to Dr. Jonathan J. Scarlet of Worcester.

Experienced and inexperienced runners may require medical attention. Dr. Dan Fortier of Framingham, a volunteer, said those who are in better snaps will sweat more, making it more important for them to drink water during the race. If not, they risk dehydration.

Bourque returns; B's capture series with 3-1 win

BOSTON — For the past week, Boston Bruins fans have been keeping their fingers crossed that Ray Bourque would make his return to the ice from a hip injury.

Last night, they got their wish. The Bruins captain and Hart Trophy candidate played for the first time in five games and sparked the Bruins to a 3-1 victory over the Hartford Whalers in Game 7 of their Adams Division semifinal last night at the Boston Garden.

With the win, the Bruins advance in the Stanley Cup playoffs and will face the Montreal Canadiens, who eliminated the Buffalo Sabres in six games. Game one of that series will be tomorrow night at the Boston Garden.

In other playoff series, the St. Louis Blues and Chicago Blackhawks kick off their Norris Division final tonight, as do the Los Angeles Kings and Edmonton Oilers in the Smythe Division. The Washington Capitals and New York Rangers begin their Patrick Division best-of-seven final tomorrow night.

This was the third straight time the Bruins had won a seventh game at the Garden. In 1988, Boston defeated the New Jersey Devils in the Wales Conference finals before losing to the Edmonton Oilers in the Stanley Cup final.

In 1983, the B's knocked off the Sabres in the Adams final on Brad Park's overtime goal before falling to the New York Islanders in the semifinals.

Bourque hadn't played since sustaining a hip injury when he was checked into the boards by the Whalers' Grant Jennings late in Game 2. It wasn't expected that Bourque would be in the lineup last night, but No. 77 skated in the pre-game warm-up and decided that it felt OK.

The Bruins also welcomed back center Craig Janney, who missed the first two games of the series with a sprained shoulder suffered late in the regular season. Janney was also forced out of Game 6 Sunday night, a 3-2 Hartford overtime win.

Janney scored a goal and added an assist, and Bourque set up the game's first goal just 1:30 into the game, scored by rookie John Byce.

Playing in just his second NHL game for the Bruins after leading the University of Wisconsin to the NCAA championship last month, Byce got Boston rolling after a great play by John Carter.

Bourque fed Carter streaking up the left side, and the fleet left winger faked past Whaler defenseman Dave Babych in the left faceoff circle. Carter cut in and got a shot on Whaler goalie Peter Sidorkiewicz, who made the save.

But Sidorkiewicz was unable to control the rebound and Byce flipped it over the fallen netminder.

Less than six minutes later, the Bruins capitalized on Whaler penalties. A roughing call on Jennings gave Boston a 5-on-3 situation for more than a minute. Hartford barely killed the first penalty before Janney took a goal-mouth feed from Brian Propp and beat Sidorkiewicz point blank.

In the second period it was Janney's turn to set up linemate Cam Neely on a smooth passing combination at the blue line. Janney waited for Neely to clear the zone and then fed the 55-goal scorer down the left side. Neely got off a shot that beat Sidorkiewicz off the right post.

The Bruins made that stand up, thanks primarily to a spectacular performance by Andy Moog in the nets. Moog made 18 saves in the first period and was beaten only by Ron Francis' power play goal on a tip of a Brad Shaw shot from the point with under seven minutes to play.

NHL playoffs

Last night's result:
Boston 3, Hartford 1 (Boston wins series, 4-3)

Today's games:
Norris Division Game 1: St. Louis at Chicago
Smythe Division Game 1: Los Angeles at Edmonton

Tomorrow's games:
Adams Division Game 1: Montreal at Boston
Patrick Division Game 1: Washington at N.Y. Rangers

Baseball team splits pair with Vermont

Brian Bright (39) and the Minutemen split a doubleheader against the University of Vermont yesterday. The Minutemen won game one, 6-4 in eight innings before falling, 4-2.

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

Someone once said it's better to be lucky then good. The UMass baseball team was lucky to salvage one win against the University of Vermont yesterday.

In game one, the Minutemen came from behind to eek out a 6-4 extra inning win. Trailing 4-1 in the last inning, the Minutemen loaded the bases on three consecutive walks. Tom Murray singled home Glenn DiSarcina to bring UMass within two, 4-2.

Mike Tobin sacrificed home the third run, and then the Catamounts blew the game. Ian Torres came around to score the tying run on a throwing error which would have ended the game.

Instead, the Minutemen courtesy of a DiSarcina blast which scored Drew Comeau won the game in extra innings. Jerry Creamer recorded the win in typical Creamer fashion, striking out six in two innings.

UVM scored three runs off starter Jim Telgheder in the first, but the Minutemen rallied late to tie and eventually win the game.

In game two the Minutemen would not be so lucky. UVM scored twice in the first off of Jeff Toothaker, they added another run in the second and one more in the fifth.

The Minutemen scored once in the third on Dan Biagini's RBI single to cut the lead to 3-1. Brian Bright knocked in a run in the sixth to trim the UVM lead back to two, 4-2. But the Minutemen could not muster up enough offense for Toothaker.

The Minutemen (17-11) continue to show signs of greatness as a team. The young UMass pitching staff continues to pitch effectively as of late.

The Minutemen will be tested this weekend when they travel to New Jersey to do battle with Rutgers in four games which could determine first place in the A-10. But before the Minutemen trek to Jersey, they entertain Springfield College on Thursday (3 p.m.) at Lorden Field.

Gorillas look to bounce back against Dartmouth

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

Last Saturday was a biggie against Yale. This Saturday, the traditional war against Army.

On the agenda today for the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team? Dartmouth College (3 p.m. in Hanover, N.H.). A lull in the schedule? Hardly.

The numbers wouldn't exactly support that claim. The Gorillas are 18-2 in the series against Dartmouth, and have won the last 18 since Dartmouth grabbed wins way back in 1965 and '66.

But Dartmouth never came any closer than last year, when it came to Amherst and shocked the Gorillas before falling, 11-10 on Rob Codignotto's goal at 1:21 of overtime.

What can UMass (5-2, ranked 14th nationally) expect this time around?

"I don't know. All I know is that they wear green and their nickname is the Big Green," said UMass coach Dick Garber, tongue slightly in cheek.

Well, how 'bout some concrete evidence.

Dartmouth has gone 1-4 this season, beating Mount St. Mary's before consecutive losses to Duke, North Carolina, Delaware and Penn. The UNC setback was of the ugly variety, 23-5, but the Green did alright against 15th-ranked Penn, losing just 11-6 on Saturday.

The primary scorer has been senior attack Chris Bates with 13 goals and five assists. Juniors Alex Robinson (5-4-9), Brett Morrison (4-4-8) and Chris Nicholas (2-6-8) are the best of the rest on a team that hasn't done much scoring so far.

Defensively, John Banks has shouldered the load in his first year as a starter, giving up 12.89 goals per game with a .514 save percentage.

The Gorillas are still reeling a bit after what Yale did in its 19-13 win. Senior All-America midfielder Jon Reese lit up UMass for eight goals and an assist.

"We practiced for two days on defending him," Garber said. "We were supposed to play him in his jock, deny him the ball, and he has a career day."

A team like Dartmouth won't likely scorch the Gorillas as badly as Yale did, but the defense is going to have to pick it up a notch for the stretch run (i.e. before the annual attack of the Orangemen on May 7).

Gorilla Grumblings: Apologies to anyone connected with the U.S. Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association for the accusation that the weekly poll wasn't released Monday. These things happen when you rely on the wonders of modern technology (a.k.a. phone hotlines).

Anyway (believe it or not), Roy Simmons' juggernaut from upstate New York is No. 1 again, with Yale right on their heels at No. 2. Losses by Brown and North Carolina opened the door for Loyola and Virginia to move into the third and fourth spots.

Carolina, Harvard, Brown, Princeton, Towson and Rutgers round out the Top 10.

And, as promised, 12th-ranked Johns Hopkins (the Jays are only 3-4, but do you think the fact that the Lacrosse Foundation is located on campus has anything to do with it? Just a coincidence? Right.) salvaged its season by beating a stumbling Army, 16-7, and Team Canada knocked off Div. III ruler Hobart, 23-9 (could be a fun day at the Dome next month, eh?).

Statistically speaking for UM, junior attack Jim McAleavey leads the team in scoring with 44 points (18 goals, 26 assists). Although a glitch in the system kept UMass players from being ranked among the national leaders last week, McAleavey would have been second in the country in scoring, behind some guy from Syracuse named Gait (it doesn't really matter which one it was — they're both incredible), and fourth in assists.

Meanwhile Codignotto, who has set career highs in goals and points, and senior midfielder Tim Soudan would have also been ranked in the goals category. Each had 18 through five games for the ranking period.

Codignotto, whose previous best was a 21-7-28 line last year, has already scored 22 goals and 10 assists for 32 points. Also joining the career high fun were sophomore attack Mike Cain (12-9-21) and junior middie Rich Senatore (8-1-9).

In case you missed it, McAleavey picked up his 100th assist against Providence and now has 106, third on the career list. His 168 career points is sixth. Senior attack Scott Hiller is seventh with 165 points and third with 120 goals. With big games today, both could surpass Brooks Sweet ('79), who had 172 career points.

Just for the record, it was Gary Gait. You can stop acting surprised now.

Rain washes out softball and tennis

Yesterday's heavy rains washed out the scheduled softball doubleheader between the University of Massachusetts and the University of Rhode Island at Totman Field.

As of now, no makeup date has been announced for the Atlantic 10 Conference twinbill.

Also rained out yesterday was the men's tennis team's scheduled match at Providence College. Again, no makeup has been scheduled.

On today's slate, the men's lacrosse team tries to get back on track when it travels to Hanover, N.H. to face Dartmouth College.

Gazelles fall to No. 1 Harvard

The University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team ran into the top team in the nation yesterday, and came away on the short end of a 16-4 score against Harvard University in Cambridge.

The fourth straight loss for the Gazelles dropped them to 2-8 on the season. The Crimson meanwhile remain unbeaten at 8-0.

Harvard jumped out to an 8-2 lead at the half, with senior co-captain Sue Murphy getting the only goals in the half for UMass. Murphy had three goals and a pair of assists to pace the Gazelles.

Murphy's third goal and a tally by freshman Rachael Splaine completed the scoring for UMass.

Thursday at 3:30 p.m., the Gazelles will make up a game against the University of Vermont that was rained out on April 4. This weekend, the team will hit the road for back-to-back games against Rutgers (Saturday at 1 p.m.) and Temple (Sunday at 1 p.m.)

Ling violates conflict of interest law

Administrator cites disgruntled employees as source of ethics probe

By MEREDITH O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

Anonymous tip-offs to Boston Globe reporters from employees fired or reassigned by Vice Chancellor for University Relations and Development Deirdre Ling may have led to a citation for violating state conflict of interest laws, a high-level administrator said yesterday.

Ling was cited by the Massachusetts Ethics Commission Tuesday for her former business ties to Enrollment Management Consultants, Inc./Advanced Marketing Technologies Inc., a company that conducted image surveys for the University in 1986. Ling will not be fined because she made the connection known to Chancellor/President Duffey.

"Deirdre Ling is one of the few members of the senior administration who has removed and reassigned people who weren't terribly effective in their jobs. And she has paid the price for it," the administrator said.

The Commission report asserts that there was "reasonable cause" for the Commission to charge Ling with conflict of interest because both she and Duffey failed to notify the Commission in writing of her potential conflict of interest.

The Commission report said the 1986 Chancellor's Executive Committee, composed of leading University of Massachusetts alumni, recommended that Duffey commission a survey to determine the public image of the University.

Ling said estimates from three companies were considered to conduct the survey, which would be paid for with trust fund money that does not require bidding.

Of the three estimates, the EMC/AMTech bid of $35,000 was the lowest and only in-state bidder, the report said.

Ling said she had previous business ties to John Maguire, president of EMC/AMTech, who she consulted four times between 1981 and 1986.

Before making her recommendation that EMC/AMTech was the best company to conduct the survey, Ling said she made her former business affiliations with Maguire clear to Duffey. "I told [Duffey] that there could be an appearance of conflict of interest, but I was not aware of the conflict of interest law," she said.

Duffey said the decision to hire Maguire's firm was solely his. "I was the one who made the decision to hire Maguire because his bid was substantially less than the other [company bids,]" he said.

"Ling's involvement in the project was minimal," Duffey said. "This was a just the technical failure to write a letter [to the Commission]."

Ling said neither she nor Duffey were aware that the conflict of interest law required them to issue written statements to the Commission about her business ties to Maguire.

"At no point in 1986 was information available on this campus about the conflict of interest law," Ling said.

UM prof develops aloe vera soft drink

By KIMBERLY O'BRIEN
Collegian Correspondent

The aloe vera plant was previously used for many external uses from a decorative house plant, to a salve for burns, to an ingredient in hand cream. Now, the aloe vera plant can be used internally as well — in a new soft drink called Aloaide.

Dr. Frederick Francis, a professor at University of Massachusetts and former head of the Food, Science and Nutrition department, developed Aloaide in response to a phone call he received last year from Deryl Seemayer, a New York advertising executive.

Seemayer, a former University of Arizona football player, contacted Francis and asked him to formulate a new soft drink which incorporated the aloe plant.

Francis, who has been at UMass for 36 years, had never developed a soft drink before, but decided to try it.

"[Seemayer] said that he wanted something different, something with a healthful approach," Francis said. "He also wanted a soft drink that was low in calories and didn't contain any preservatives."

Francis developed the formula in two weeks of laboratory time, but took longer to test it.

"My number one priority was sanitation and safety," he said. "Seemayer wanted aloe and a particular flavor to be incorporated into Aloaide, and I put in all the rest of the ingredients."

Aloaide is already being sold in Massachusetts, and will be introduced to Rhode Island, St. Louis and Hartford within the next two weeks. Denver, Puerto Rico and the Caribbean should be able to purchase the product soon, Francis said.

Although Francis is the developer of Aloaide, he has no financial interest in the company.

"It's his name, my product," he said. "I don't gain financially from it."

Francis, 68, said he wants to make clear that no outrageous claims about the health benefits of Aloaide can be made. Francis said that he used the Policy clarification urged

Investment policy 'fuzzy' on Israeli bonds

By MEREDITH O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

Administrators and students yesterday decided to ask Chancellor/President Duffey and the board of trustees for a definitive ruling on whether University investments in the state of Israel violate its South African investment policy.

The wording of the University investment policy was dubbed "unclear" and "fuzzy" regarding investments in countries.

Eyad Kishawi, senior engineering major who was one of three students participating the discussions yesterday, said Israeli bonds held by UMass fall under the University policy of investment in a country with "apartheid racial policies."

"Land laws, various discriminatory laws, collective punishment and an iron-fist policy clearly make Israel an apartheid state," he said.

"We plan on assisting the students in preparing a brief to President/Chancellor Duffey into the meaning of the [investment] policy that states no investments in 'countries with apartheid policies,'" said James Leheny, associate chancellor adding Duffey may then chose to forward the issue to the trustees for a ruling.

"The students have an argument," Leheny said. "We want them to present the best and well-researched argument they can to the trustees."

Clause 2-A of the University's investment policy states: "The University will not invest in any company or lending institution which either directly or through its subsidiaries or affiliates does business with the Republic of South Africa or in countries with similar apartheid racial policies."

Deirdre Ling, vice chancellor for university relations and development said: "We are making the best faith effort to be the most pro-active university with one of the most restrictive [South African] investment policies. We want to clarify the blurriness

GEO preps for three-day teach-in at Whitmore

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
Collegian Staff

Members of the Graduate Employee Organization are again stepping up actions against the University of Massachusetts administration in preparation for next Tuesday's civil disobedience action when the organization plans to block entrances to the Whitmore Administration Building.

Today graduate student employees, chiefly teaching assistants, are expected to begin a three-day teach-in to be conducted at various locations in Whitmore.

Susan Buechler, an English graduate student who is coordinating the teach-in, said the primary focus of the action is Chancellor Duffey.

"The purpose of the teach-in is to put pressure on Duffey," she said. "We want to show him that we do work and that we are employees."

Buechler said while classes will be scattered throughout the building, a special contingent will be stationed in front of Duffey's office to emphasize the graduate students concerns.

She expects approximately 75 classes will be participating, however more teaching assistants may join in.

For the past three years, GEO has made effors to gain collective bargaining privileges through union recognition. With these privileges, graduate students would be able to negotiate their salaries, benefits and other working conditions with the administration like other unions on campus.

The GEO voted last week to hold a "civil disobedience" action against the administration in protest of election stipulations that GEO says will prevent a fair and impartial election to be held.

"How was I to know that I was supposed to write a letter?

"I suppose the Commission is giving us credit [by not fining her or Duffey] because I did at least orally disclose my affiliations," she said. "We were just ignorant of the law."

Dennis Madson, vice chancellor for student affairs, said it is unfortunate that one of the University's finest administrators was the subject of attention that is "out of proportion" to a small technical violation.

The high level administrator added, "If there's a lesson to be learned here, it's that anyone who writes a letter to the Boston Globe can make life miserable for a public administrator."

GSS: Administrators lack leadership

By MARGARET McATEER
Collegian Correspondent

Claiming Chancellor Duffey and Provost O'Brien have demonstrated a lack of leadership in confronting the present fiscal crisis hitting the University, the Graduate Student Senate passed a vote of no confidence toward the two top administrators

Pierre Laliberte, vice-president of the GSS, said that the two administrators have not created channels for dialogue between graduate students and the administration in discussing fee increases.

The board of trustees recently raised the graduate student fees by nearly 15 percent for the academic year 1990-91.

The GSS charges that Duffey and O'Brien recommended these increases without consulting the GSS and without giving graduate students an opportunity to publicly debate them.

The vote of no confidence is also a response to the failure of Duffey and O'Brien to hold fair union elections in which graduate students can vote on whether or not they want to have collective bargaining representation.

The GSS encourages the Faculty Senate and the Student Government Association to also pass votes of no confidence in Duffey and O'Brien.

Bruce Tull, the executive officer for the GSS, said the administration has been restructuring the University unilaterally, without considering input from various democratic governing bodies on campus.

"The GSS and the SGA have been marginalized on campus," said Tull. "I would argue student governance has pretty much been forgotten [by the administration] in the past two years."

Tull said although the GSS resolution of no confidence accomplishes little on its own, it is hoped that the motion will encourage the SGA and Faculty Senate to pass similar resolutions.

If all three governing bodies pass such a resolution, a door may be opened up which will allow more democratic leadership, Tull said.

In other senate news:

- Elections for the positions of executive officer, treasurer, vice-president and president will be held on April 30 and May 1 in the Campus Center concourse from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. All graduate students are urged to vote.

Environmental activists urge student action

Rally promotes long-term national solutions

Environmental activists and Student Government Association members urged some 30 people to take part in campus action to preserve the environment at a rally held in front of the Student Union yesterday.

MassPIRG, an advocacy group for environmental issues, sponsored the rally titled "Save the Earth."

"We want to turn our concern into action to create a change in environmental policies," said MassPIRG co-chair Aaron Rome. "We need comprehensive solutions that will last into the future." Rome said students can send postcards to their state representatives telling them to strengthen the Clean Air Act. He said MassPIRG will sponsor another rally for changing environmental policies at the Statehouse in Boston next Monday.

Maggie Magner, SGA senator and member of the Board of Governors, said a local boycott of California table grapes in support of the United Farm Workers Union will save the environment from "the billions and billions of pounds of pesticides dropped worldwide each year."

The SGA has endorsed the U.F.W.'s grape boycott and has sent delegates to convince local supermarkets not to carry California table grapes, said Angus McQuilken, Student Trustee.

Magner said People's Market and Louis' Foods in Amherst have agreed to the abide Conference to tackle date rape prevention

By AMY HENRY
Collegian Staff

A conference to develop a plan of action to eliminate date rape on the University of Massachusetts campus is scheduled for Monday April 23. The conference, titled "A Day of Action Against Date Rape on Campus," is a follow-up to last November's conference on date rape.

Eileen Stewart, dean of students and an organizer of the event, said there is a need to have a plan to effectively deal with date rape that is tailored specifically to the UMass campus.

"There is a problem of date rape on campus and it is important to examine it and take some effective action against it," Stewart said.

The goals of the conference are to look at data from a spring 1989 UMass date rape survey that was conducted by the Student Affairs Research and Evaluation Office, divide into groups to discuss and plan strategies for effectively dealing with date rape, and present these plans and strategies for the future.

It was discovered from the survey of women who responded that 10 percent of them reported having been raped, 40 percent reported having been kissed against their will and 12 percent of the men surveyed admitted to kissing women against their will.

The free conference is being held in Campus Center room 174-176 from 12:30 to 5 p.m. Sponsors of the conference are the Dean of Students Office, Department of Public Safety, Donahue Institute for Governmental Services, Everywoman's Center, Provost Office, University Health Services, Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs.

SGA filibustering prevents debate

By JULIE LIVINGSTONE
Collegian Satff

After four weeks of delays through filibuster, the Undergraduate Student Senate heard a motion to approve the fiscal status of the Campus Center Board of Governors.

An agreement was reached between representatives from the Student Government Association and the BOG last Monday, raising a proposed allocation to the Board from $2 per fee-paying student to $5 per fee-paying student.

This fee is directly processed into the Student Activities Trust Fund.

SGA Speaker Dan Chesnicka addressed the Senate regarding the attempt on the part of a small group of persons to force another filibuster.

"I will not let the actions of seven factious people stop the consideration of this motion," he said.

Despite several minutes of confusion, Karen Talbot, SGA treasurer-elect presented the BOG fee agreement to the Senate.

Due to a motion made by senators to adjourn at 11:15 p.m., debate on the SGA/BOG agreement was not possible.

"The important thing is that we finally got to the motion," Talbot said. "We'll go straight into debate on it next week, before any announcements."

Sue Gordon, chairperson of the BOG said she has been allowing the Senate to "do their thing" for the past four weeks.

However, she said she now wants the Senate to vote.

"I want to walk away with this agreement," she said.

Islamics celebrate holy month

By JULIA SEREBRINSKY
Collegian Correspondent

Islamic students at the University of Massachusetts observe the holy month of Ramadan without being hampered by American life-style and pressures of school work, said Abu Bakr al-Shinguity, president of the Muslim Student Organization at UMass.

Ramadan, which falls on the ninth month of the lunar calendar, started on March 26 and and will end next Wednesday he said. It commemorates the month in which the Koran, a book believed by Muslims to be the literal word of God, was revealed.

al-Shinguity said the observance of Ramadan requires abstinence from food and drink from dawn to dusk for a period of 29 days.

Fasting during the Ramadan is designed to make one compassionate for people who are hungry or in need.

According to Yvonne Y. Haddad, an Islamic history professor at UMass: "Fasting [assures] the feeling of equality of all believers before God, providing them with an intimate experience of need and hunger, and teaching them compassion and equanimity."

"Ramadan is a time of remembrance of those who are in need, those people who are hungry because they can't get food," al-Shinguity said.

Ramadan is also a time for charitable works, he said adding that throughout the month the Muslim community on campus increases their collections for the needy.

Although the observance of Ramadan requires one to spend the day fasting at the mosque in pious contemplation, Muslim students on campus resort to having a five-minute prayer in the morning and one night-time prayer, al-Shinguity said.

He said students also gather on campus daily at noon

Liberals ignore Palestine

Ahh, the hypocrisy. American liberals everywhere preaching self-determination, human rights and equality in a show of solidarity with oppressed peoples throughout the world.

Jamal Aruri

They see the policy of Apartheid relegating blacks to a sub-human existence in South Africa and call for its dismantlement. They see state-sponsored terrorism in places like Chile and El Salvador and call for an end to United States compliance.

Closer to home, they see an assault on civil liberties and say it can't continue. Women must have the right to choose. Gays and lesbians must have equal rights. Blacks and minorities must be afforded the same opportunities as the rest of us.

Yet when the oppression of the Palestinian people stares them in the face, they seem to suffer from myopia. Palestinians do not have the right to choose their own government or enjoy the same rights and privileges as Israeli Jews do.

But American liberals do not support self-determination and equality for the Palestinian people. They do not call for the end of United States aid to Israel, never mind sanctions or divestment.

There is no shortage of analogies between Israel and South Africa. They represent the last bastions of the colonial settler enterprise and strongholds of herenvolk democracy (democracy for the settlers but not the natives).

In both countries segregation is firmly entrenched in the social and legal fabrics of society and in the administrative practices of the state.

While liberal Congressmen condemn the human rights violations in countries like El Salvador, Chile, South Africa, Iraq and China, they label Israel as a model of democracy and western values, rewarding it with one-third of America's total foreign aid.

Yes, this is the same Israel that has been blasted by Amnesty International and even the U.S. State department.

When Israeli troops shoot indiscriminately at unarmed civilians, we hear the tough situation the soldiers are placed in.

When official Israeli policy of beating Palestinian demonstrators is implemented, we hear of the psychological problems with which young Israeli soldiers have to cope.

When Palestinians are imprisoned without charge or trial or their newspapers are shut down and their national symbols banned, we hear of the need to sacrifice civil liberties to preserve Israel's security.

When a family's home is demolished because one of its members has been accused of throwing a stone, we hear that it is a regrettable but necessary policy.

When Palestinian eight and nine-year-olds are growing up illiterate because their schools have been ordered closed, we hear more excuses and attempts at justification.

So, defenders of Israel, hold your letters because we've already heard your excuses, and we're sick of them.

It is about time that Israel be treated for what it is: an Apartheid state, a gross violator of human rights and a country not worthy of our tax dollars or UMass investments.

End the hypocrisy.

Third World should remember past and recognize new game

1973 was a crucial year. It was the beginning of a whole new international ball game where the stakes were never more clearly defined. It was the year that Arab and other Muslim oil-producing nations came together in a spectacular fashion, after the Arab-Israeli war, and drastically slowed the flow of gasoline into the engines that powered the West.

The consequence of that singular act had devastating psychological and material impact on nations of the West, and its effects were stunning for more reasons than one.

First of all, a section of the Third World had proved that, if provoked, it was capable of concerted action. It had clearly set a precedent, one that had the potential of paving the way for such actions in the future. It also showed the so-called fractious nations of the Arab world could identify their common interests and act upon it.

Second, there was the nature of the boycott itself. It was debilitating to the economies of the West. It was also the first time that the leaders of the Western powers understood the nature of such a threat.

A concerted action of the oil-producing nations, led by Saudi Arabia, could change the foundation of the international trading system, so biased in favor of the Western nations.

K.G. Jayanth

It had the prospect of redefining the terms of world trade, which was based on an unequal exchange rate between the industrial and the non-industrial world and, to a large extent, on a one-way flow of raw materials whose prices are completely dictated by the industrial world. Of all the raw materials flowing to the West, none is as vital as petroleum.

Since then not much has happened. Saudi Arabia, which sits atop the largest reservoir of petroleum on earth, has moved away from its stake in the Arab world and is not firmly ensconced into the lap of the West. By the early 1980s, the Americas, in exchange for money and weapons, had persuaded former President Zia-ul-Haq of Pakistan to station Pakistani troops in Saudi Arabia to prop the Saudi dynasty, the family that runs the country.

The Rapid Deployment Forces was also created to directly intervene in Saudi Arabia in the event of a hostile takeover by forces inimical to Western interests. The Western nations had clearly defined their interests and have moved aggressively to preserve them.

It is imperative that nations of the Third World understand the rules of the new game. The military option on strategic interests and the formation of economic blocs of the West, which in the future may include the Soviet Union and the Eastern bloc nations, will combine to protect an international trading system that will largely be to the detriment of the Third World.

Sooner or later, we will realize that the only way out of a subservient world is to identify where our interests lie and act.

K.G. Jayanth is a UMass Graduate student

Another perspective on Kashmir

This is a response to Pratip Dastidar and Sumantra Bose's column ("Kashmir: Valley of Tears," April 9). They have tried to oversimplify the issue by putting the blame squarely on the Indian government and the so-called "fascistic Hindu fundamentalism."

They contend that "This January, the valley exploded. Hundreds of unarmed demonstrators have been gunned down since then by the Indian security forces. Blanket curfews have been imposed on town after town, and a total ban on press coverage is in effect."

Yes, the valley did explode and curfews had to be imposed on various towns in Kashmir. But the authors neglected to write anything about the causes behind the imposition of the curfews.

In January and February more than 115 people, including a dozen paramilitary personnel, were killed. Angry mobs set fire to establishments belonging to the Indian government. When curfews were imposed to prevent damage to government property, the crowds spilled out into the streets, in violation of the orders.

Kashmir is under the siege of militants. Government officials are being threatened, kidnapped and killed. The judicial system stands paralyzed. The government has sent repeated feelers to the militants, indicating its desire to talk. In fact, the government has created a new ministry to handle Kashmir affairs.

But a political dialogue does not figure on the agenda of the militants. In an attempt to gain international support, the militants want to continue playing their game of violence and destruction.

Given the circumstances listed above, the government has no option other than to impose curfews when mobs turn violent.

The authors called the militants "Kashmiri nationalists." Is it fair to call such people, who have let loose a reign of terror and killed several government functionaries, "nationalists?"

They wrote that "The Indian government has decided to crush the Kashmiri uprising by brute force. It is also no coincidence that repression has been unleashed on Muslims at a time when an alarming ascendancy of fascistic Hindu fundamentalism is evident in India."

This is a blatantly false and highly irresponsible statement. On the contrary, scared by the fanatic militancy stalking in the valley, 10,000 Hindu families have left Kashmir.

The agitation in the valley had not been communal till now, and not even the Muslim leaders in India have claimed that Muslims were being repressed in Kashmir. In fact, many of the militants too are unhappy at the exodus of the Hindus. If the authors' contention is true, Hindus in the valley would have been the first targets of the militants.

Finally, I find it rather ironic that an article that concludes with "Satyameva Jayate (Truth alone triumphs)" contains misleading and, at times, incorrect information.

The authors should avoid indulging in misrepresentation of facts, especially while dealing with sensitive issues like Kashmir. All Indians, including their government, want peace to return to the valley.

Ian Paisley's depraved Unionists are screaming over recent efforts by the collaborators to tell John Bull and the Tory Thatcher where to go.

Owen Broadhurst

The government of Ireland is a disgrace. As Paul Hill of the Guildford Four once noted, it is insane for that government, which supposedly represents my people in Ireland, to stab their heroes in the back simply for resisting British imperialism.

Fianna Fail has apparently learned something from its electoral setback in June, however. They learned that, in spite of their George Bush-style exploitation of nationalism, they can no longer rest assured of the support of workers in Ireland.

Also repudiated were Fine Gael and the "Progressive" Democrats, as Irish workers turned out in droves for the left, the Workers' and Labour parties.

What Fianna Fail apparently learned was that empty rhetoric will no longer be stomached — if they want to see the country united as they claim they do.

Fianna Fail's harsh austerity measures (responsible in large part for the wave of illegal immigrants now being harassed by blatantly bigoted United States customs and INS lackeys) are largely what drive Irish workers to the left.

And it doesn't hurt matters that Labour — most intent on winning back support lost to the Workers' party when Labour formed a coalition government with Fine Gael — is focusing on extradition as an issue.

The Supreme Court of Ireland — a Fianna Fail tool if one ever did exist — has recently been taking stands that have Tory newspapers in Imperial Britain screeching.

The Court, a Haughey court (stacked with idiots who have the nerve to tell the people of the South to "get more to grips with the Unionist point of view"), has actually taken a stand against disemboweling an Irishman!

What happened? Why the change in tune?

In goal, Irish political prisoners have reason to fear for their health — and the Supreme Court of Ireland agreed. It is the farthest thing from a statement that Irish political prisoners are no less than Prisoners of War, but Ireland's government doesn't think it is at war.

My nation is occupied, but the state (that is, the Republic of Ireland) ignores this. This is the same court that has overturned historical precedent in order to screw Dominic McGlinchey.

Fianna Fail is trying to criminalize and isolate the Republican resistance. Sinn Fein and the resistance have accomplished wonders in isolating themselves, unfortunately.

But Fianna Fail has nevertheless consistently been involved in an act of treason in order to silence a movement that is embarrassing them, exposing their hypocrisy.

This latest ruling is not a victory, but another George Bush-style effort to blind Irish workers with a dazzling overdose of nationalistic fervor.

This is all well and good if it could accomplish what everyone wants — British soldiers the hell off our soil! Of course, it can't accomplish that so long as it honors a ridiculous agreement reinforcing partition.

Abolish the Hillsborough Treaty!

The friendship and commitment of procrastination

Hello. Allow me to introduce myself. I am Mr. Procrastination. I am writing this editorial today because Josh couldn't get here in time to do it himself. I think he's still in bed.

Some of you out there probably already know me well. I'm sure we've hung out and did basically nothing together. How are you? Running late, I hope.

I've been around for centuries, working hard at my job and making friends all over the globe. It started with Adam and Eve. I'm the one that brought up the idea to them about just hangin' around the garden and having a bite to eat.

Some of you out there are very smart. You've got your desk organizers and you turn your clocks ahead ten minutes or so. But I'm smarter. I steal things from your desk and hide them in places I know you'll never look in. I also wait 'til you fall asleep and turn your clocks back.

The guy that writes this column? We've known each other for years. I introduced myself to him during grade school when he was sick. I taught him the "run the thermometer under the hot water" trick, to put off another day of school. He still uses it today.

Oh I've taught this guy many tricks of the trade over the years for avoiding getting things done. I taught him the art of rationalization, which he has quite mastered. I've pulled all-nighters with him and showed him how to cram a year's worth of info into one day. I've even managed to convince him that this is the best way to learn.

My proudest moment came at Josh's graduation. He was always hanging out with me during the school year. He was the King of Tardy. Well anyway, graduation evening, he and I were hanging out and I convinced him he was perfectly on time for the outdoor ceremony. I told him to walk to school rather than jog.

Josh Galitsky

He arrived at the stadium and his class had already started the procession from the school to the stadium. He started walking alongside a fence that ran parallel to the class of '85 but in the opposite direction. There were no breaks in the fence to cut in and join his friends.

He began jogging and then running and then open sprinting with cap and gown in hand. It was hilarious. His Housemaster, who had tried to undo all my important lessons of non-punctuality, saw him and merely shook his head. The graduating class of 586, spotted him and began chanting his name and rooting on his one mile dash to graduation. Ahh, it was just like the Olympics.

He ran faster and faster and finally got around the gate at his rightful place in line. He trembled as he walked, jumping into his commencement gown. Classmates from all sides prodded and poked bobby pins into his head to keep his cap on. He was frantic.

I watched from the fence with pride as he arrived at the stadium, stood tall and strutted in as if nothing had happened. Only I, and no doubt the people next to him in line, knew that he was perspiring like a lake.

We stayed friends even after that. I was really good at convincing him how warm it was under his covers and how much he needed just 10 more minutes of sleep. Oh, by the way, I was the one who invented the snooze button.

Still don't recognize me? I'm the one that tells you it's time for a study break and convinces you it should take three hours. I'm the one who tells the bus driver to leave one minute early. I'm the one that hides your income tax forms in the underwear drawer.

Oh, here comes Josh. He looks disturbed. Probably had another spat with Mr. Conscience. He looks pissed at me. What a love-hate relationship. Gotta go. Hope to see you soon. Let's be best friends someday, shall we? Just like me and Josh.

Letters to the Editor

Jewish history interpreted logically

I am writing in response to Jeremy Levinson's editorial ("Passover celebration reminder of oppression, liberation," April 12) that reprimands Israelis, or as he describes them, "Racist-Zionists."

I don't know where Mr. Levinson received his Jewish historical education, but his books or teachers skipped a few chapters; chapters that cover approximately 2000 years of oppression of a peaceful, ambitious and socially conscious people. I am not what one may call a "religious" Jew and am not speaking from a theological standpoint. I am speaking from a logical standpoint.

Throughout history, even the most violent persecution of the Jews came about unprovoked. They were simply existing and practicing religion in a troubled region that decided Judaism, and those who practiced it, were the problem source.

Death, mandatory conversion, or expulsion of the Jews resulted. In World War II, the Nazi's decided it was the Jews, not the "Zionists" or would-be Israelis, as a people who were poisoning the world. The slaughter of 6,000,000 Jews ensued.

Similar historical atrocities against the Jews could fill a book, they are so numerous. Yes, there are other groups who have been or are being discriminated against, oppressed or slaughtered. My point is that in the past, the Jews have been guided by such values as freedom, justice and tolerance. Where did it get them? All the centuries of tradition, education and effort simply to be left alone to practice as they please, what did it buy them? It bought them persecution and fear from countries around the world.

The fight in the Middle East today forces Israel to take tough military and political stands for survival, not suppression of the Palestinians. Israeli policies and practices are absolutely essential to her existence.

The fight over Israel is not because of what Palestinians don't have, but what the Jews do! Even if Israel were to relinquish what is already, geographically, a dot on the map, someone else would find just reason to oust the Jews from Israel.

As far as the divisions amongst Jews themselves and their beliefs, I'd advise you to look at Arabs and Palestinians; they wrote the book on warring factions within an ethnic group. What do you call the Iran and Iraq war? How many differing Muslim sects refuse to recognize the existence of the others?

Mr. Levinson, with all the anti-Semitism in the world based on narrow vision and misinformation, it is sad to hear the same thing coming from another Jew. "Peace and Love to all," though you preach, there are times when idealism must give way to realism.

Anger towards rapists, not all men

In response to Meredith O'Brien's column ("Rape: It's just inevitable," April 17):

Don't generalize that ". . . men aren't compassionate, considerate or rational." Men that rape fit that description, but that leaves out a lot of men. Direct your anger towards the rapists, not towards men in general.

Secondly, I'm surprised that rape occurs as often as it does. You would be hard-pressed to find a college-aged woman who wasn't informed of the latest rape statistics. My question is, if everyone is so super-conscious and aware of rape, why do they continue to act as if they're unaware?

Of course, blaming the woman is a ridiculous thought. Obviously, the men are the only ones to blame. There's no way to argue otherwise.

There are two ways to stop rape. Plan A: men will have to change. But, since the men that rape "aren't compassionate, considerate, or rational," it is therefore up to the women to try plan, as in B: Be Smart.

The nature of a cliff is, if you hang around the edge long enough, you will fall off. Maybe some men work the same way: hang around long enough, and you could get raped. This doesn't justify the act, but it leads me to wonder what some women are thinking by hanging around the cliff for so long.

Earth Week a worldwide effort

Typically, college students are the most frequent activists, but this time we're not alone. This week the activism of UMass is part of a worldwide effort — Earth Week.

On the news, and on the cover of Newsweek, environmental consciousness is a hot topic. This week is a focus on changing how people think about the quality of our water, the air we breathe, the trash we produce and what it will all be like in the future.

This week's publicity, benefit concerts and weekend events (esp. UMass Campus Pond) will help involve students. But how will citizens be impacted, by means other than mass-media events, to think about the "environmental decade" ahead?

The Recycling Initiative Campaign is one way. Although on-campus recycling is becoming successful, consider the many large cities that don't recycle their trash. If it were a law, doing something for the environment would become a part of every Massachusetts resident's daily life.

If you feel that the Recycling Initiative, which has been endorsed by many faculty members, is important, then join the group that is lobbying in Boston to support it.

While April 22 (Earth Day) celebrates environmental awareness, April 23 (Monday) is Lobby Day and is a chance to make a difference. Environmentalism is not just another good cause - how we treat our earth affects each and every one of us.

Inability to appreciate art criticized

As a UMass art student concerned with the quality and accuracy of journalistic writing, I am responding to the April 10 Collegian review of Color Wise, a show of recent paintings by Leonel Gongora and John Grillo, now at the Fauve Gallery.

The author portrays the exhibits as a failed attempt on the artist's parts to "expose us to their backgrounds" in Latin American art, by not providing the "desperately needed appreciation" in this country for this kind of art.

I wonder what kind of appreciation the author himself has for "Hispanic art" when he condescendingly states that it is "very colorful," and something which "American art collectors have . . . a hard time stomaching . . ." (as if American art collectors are the only people who look at or are able to appreciate art.)

What he calls Grillo's (he means Gongora's) "pale, thin, boney figures . . . pasted against a background of chaotic serendipitous colors . . ." are figures which in some paintings are slender and graceful, in some robust and aggressive, and in some distorted and angry, representing the show's full range of emotions, a culmination of the years of both artists' experience.

Although he claims that the paintings "simply don't have any effect," he describes the figures as "grizzly and harrowing."

Obviously then, the paintings did have an impact; a disturbing one perhaps, but an impact nevertheless. Mr. Hopkins is praising the artist, to have an impact on the viewer is the artists' goal.

Perhaps the grizzly and harrowing effect, the author describes has to do with his apparent discomfort with figures which "refuse to let go of their identities or desires." Again, although in the author's eyes this is a criticism, it is the most appropriate compliment he could give to the artists whose show is about the expression of desires through color.

Color Wise is about energy and passion translated into color with both skill and intuition. It is about the friendship between two artists who paint together and share ideas while retaining their own identities in their work.

What is most striking about the paintings is their conveyance of the artists' own passion and enjoyment in creating the work, something which caused this viewer to leave the gallery feeling alive and inspired.

All countries investing in South Africa must carry responsibility

It is scary when journalistic standards are lowered so consistently that one doesn't notice or get upset to see mediocre writings substantiated by no research or facts.

David R. Mark's column on Israel's ties to South Africa ("Singling out Israel's linkage to South Africa wrong," April 17) is another example of this sub-par journalism.

Obviously, Mr. Mark wanted to vent his own anger at members of the Third World community for expressing valid outrage at Israel's links to South Africa.

From this column the reader is supposed to infer that we, the Third World community, are somehow anti-Semitic for voicing these concerns and not including Japan in our expressions of disgust.

We are supposed to be more outraged at Japan, because Japan is South Africa's biggest trading partner.

The Third World community should now forget Israel and start bashing Japan.

Does it matter whether it's 2 million dollars or 42 million being invested?

Is Japan more wrong and Israel less wrong?

Wouldn't it be more correct to assume that there is equal responsibility to be placed on all countries that do business with South Africa?

But Mr. Mark doesn't stop there.

Mr. Mark also delves heavily into supposition when he says that "Perhaps the reason some Third World students have come down so heavily on Israel and the United States but not Japan is because . . . Japan has invested and aided so many Third World nations."

While this may be true, at least Japan's trading is even-handed.

While they may conduct business with South Africa, they are also lending a financial hand to Third World countries.

Can Israel say the same?

Mr. Mark then departs from reality altogether by saying that Jews are the majority in Israel (which is true if you only count the naturalized Arabs and not those who came after 1948 or those living in the territories) and that Jews have always been in Israel.

So have other minorities.

I'm just fed up.

Only in the Collegian can articles such as this be printed and given any type of credibility.

Innuendos like those found in the Collegian every week do more to promote racism on this campus than a group of white students calling me a nigger.

At least those that shout derogatory names are not trying to mask their prejudice with fancy words.

Maybe Mr. Mark and other members of the Collegian staff, who so freely throw around the word anti-Semite (in reference to the Third World community), should stop trying to conceal their politics behind irrational name-calling.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE UMASS AT AMHERST COMMUNITY OF WORKERS AND STUDENTS

The Graduate Employee Organization, District 65 of the United Auto Workers' Union has planned a non-violent, civil disobedience action for Tuesday, April 24 if the administration has not negotiated a democratic election process with GEO by that date. The action will consist of peacefully blocking the doors at Whitmore until they agree to a fast and fair election or arrest us. We know you fully understand the seriousness of such an action. So do the two hundred members who have expressed a willingness to be arrested if that is what it takes.

It is clear that the administration of UMass Amherst is opposed to a Graduate Employee Union. They hide behind "legal opinions" and bureaucratic power struggles, but we know now that Chancellor/President Duffey is the key figure on our path to recognition. Therefore, Whitmore is our target.

Graduate Employees have been fighting for the basic human right to negotiate their working conditions since 1976. We will succeed in 1990 not just because the time is right, and not just because Graduate Employees are determined, but also because we know we have the community behind us.

Better conditions for Graduate Employees and secure funding for graduate programs will benefit the entire campus through improving the quality of graduate teaching and research, the General Education Program, and the many other unique programs that make UMass great. There has been little effective advocacy for graduate programs. Graduate Employees have decided that we can do the job better than anyone else.

Graduate Employees are in a special situation. We are both employees and students. We therefore can see the problems of the campus from both fronts. Though the administration wants to use our status against us, we know that it will enhance our ability to advocate for UMass in Boston as a part of the labor movement and as part of the public higher education lobby.

WE CALL ON INDIVIDUALS AND GROUPS OF THE UMASS COMMUNITY TO PARTICIPATE IN OUR ACTION IN WHATEVER WAY POSSIBLE. JOIN US IN OUR PUBLIC RALLIES; JOIN US IN BLOCKING THE DOORS; JOIN US IN WHATEVER WAY POSSIBLE TO CONVINCE THE ADMINISTRATION THAT A FAST AND FAIR UNION ELECTION FOR GRADUATE EMPLOYEES IS THE ONLY OPTION.

Mingus reissue: the master in all his glory

By BILL ROSENBLATT
Collegian Staff

Valley Jazz

Imagine a classical music scholar happening upon an old, tattered manuscript in an attic somewhere in Vienna, and determining it to be an undiscovered Mozart symphony that the Austrian wunderkind worked on during a large part of his life. If this actually happened, there would be a sensation in the classical music world. Assuming the manuscript's authenticity were believed, it would be the discovery of the century.

Well, substitute "Mingus" for "Mozart" and you get an idea of what the reaction is among jazz fans to the recently-discovered Mingus magnum opus, Epitaph, a live recording of which was just released on CBS as a double-CD set. This behemoth of a work is over two hours long and was scored for a 30-piece double big band. It encompasses all of the excitement, colors, rhythms, sweat, beauty and chaos that characterize Mingus' music.

The music was rediscovered five years ago. As far as can be told, Mingus worked on it intermittently from 1940 and 1962, a period during which his music underwent changes as radical as the music itself. He attempted to have the work performed in 1962 at New York's Town Hall, but several extra-musical factors combined to make the performance a total disaster.

Mingus did record a few of the sections of Epitaph with smaller groups during his lifetime — these are known to Mingus fans as "Better Get It In Your Soul," "Peggy's Blue Skylight" and a couple of others. However, the entire two-hour-plus work did not get a complete performance until last summer, ten years after Mingus' death. The noted musicologist Gunther Schuller spent long hours editing the disheveled, disorganized manuscript and preparing it for its premiere at Lincoln Center.

The posthumous premiere was documented on the CBS recording. The massive orchestra included a few musicians whom Mingus actually intended to play Epitaph: trombonists Eddie Bert, Paul Faulise and Britt Woodman, trumpeter Snooky Young, saxophonist Jerome Richardson, and tubist Don Butterfield. It also included several other Mingus alumni (Jack Walrath, George Adams, John Handy, Roland Hanna and others) and young talents such as Wynton Marsalis and Bobby Watson.

Epitaph is an ideal (if lengthy) introduction to Mingus' incredible music. Mingus was one of the very few composers who assimilated Duke Ellington's ability to straddle the line between composition and improvisation and to write works that exploited specific musicians' capabilities. His synergistic mixture of Duke's sophistication, the Black church music of his childhood and the contemporary classical music he studied is unique and instantly identifiable. And his scores are very difficult to play.

The Lincoln Center performance of Epitaph would be noteworthy as a logistical achievement if nothing else: imagine how difficult it must have been to get these 30 all-stars to be in the same room on the same night, much less to play this extremely demanding music.

But the musical quality of the performance renders such considerations unimportant. This is one of the few "repertory" jazz recordings I have heard that does not sound like the audio equivalent of a wax museum exhibit, i.e., stiff and overly reverent. The music is celebratory, reveling in Mingus as Mingus reveled in life. Tickets to the concert were expensive, even by New York standards, and these musicians gave the (no doubt affluent) audience something it probably didn't bargain for: an object-lesson in what jazz is really about, right there within the "dignified" confines of Alice Tully Hall.

Epitaph represents the kind of relevant musicology that we need more of, as opposed to the publish-or-perish dross that was most recently typified by the argument over how the death of Mozart's pet starling affected his compositional style (this is not a joke). For those who want a taste before investing in the double-CD set, WMUA (91.1 FM) will broadcast Epitaph in its entirety next Tuesday at 9:30 a.m.

Philly band gives night of hootin' and hollerin' at Pearl Street

Hooters
Pearl Street
Monday, April 16

The Hooters played to a packed Pearl Street crowd Monday night bringing with them the rockabilly sound that originated their fame. The audience, made up of a diverse age group, danced and sang to the band's 17 song set, which mixed the old with the new.

Promoting their latest album, Zig Zag, they kicked off the evening with "Don't Knock It 'Til You Try It," a political reggae tune that depicts the outrage of innocent bystanders gunned down in the senseless violence of gang warfare in a big city.

Mid-way through the show, the Horner "hooter" was introduced to the crowd as the "the famous little piece of crap that we named our band after." It was then featured in what could arguably be the bands biggest hit, and highlight of the evening, "And We Danced." This only added to the already high level of enthusiasm projected from the audience.

Also included in the set was a ballad entitled "Heaven Laughs" and "Brother Don't You Walk Away," both off of Zig Zag. They also performed their hits "Day By Day" and "Where Do the Children Go," from the Nervous Nights LP.

"Johnny B," featuring a recorder solo, and "Satellite," both from the One Way Home album, were performed as well. The evening was capped off with an encore in which the Philly group performed a stunning updated version of the classic folk ballad "500 Miles." The Hooter's version made reference to the recent student uprising in Beijing as well as other recent headlines of the late 1980s.

The Hooters may no longer have the popularity they once had, but they still have the same raw energy. They proved that Monday night.

Local bands play for the homeless

By ANTONIA MAGUIRE
Collegian Staff

"Hand To Hand To Help The Homeless" is the title of the benefit concert featuring New Horizons and Mini Bus Sandwich on Saturday, from noon to 4 p.m., at the Alpha Epsilon Pi fraternity house.

Hosted by the brothers in an effort to raise more than $3000 for the homeless of the Valley, the ticket price of $8 includes a Rastafarian T-shirt as well as all the rock and reggae you can soak up.

Socials Chairman of Alpha Epsilon Pi Fraternity, Carl Rossow, said that the brothers chose to raise money for the homeless of Hadley, Northampton and Amherst after looking at statistics revealed by Hampshire County concerning the amount of money needed just to keep the homeless shelters open all year around, let alone expand them.

New Horizons will be jammin there.

"We were horrified at the squeeze the state budget cuts are putting on these shelters," he said. "One of the shelters we are donating to can only afford to open for five months of the year, but being homeless is a year round problem in Northampton and Amherst."

Over 500 people are expected at the concert which will take place in the front yards of AEP and the neighboring Hillel house. The concert proceeds will benefit both Jessie's House in Northampton, and Amherst Friends for the Homeless, which runs a shelter called Rosemary's Place.

Jessie's House provides a safe, family like environment for up to 21 people — the fraternity hopes their donation will enable the shelter to stay open all the year around.

Similarly, they hope that their donation to Rosemary's Place, which provides an emergency shelter for homeless single women, will give the them a "head start in the expansion of their services."

The fraternity has held philanthropic events of this nature since their reopening in 1982. They also sponsor Meals on Wheels which they run for a couple of weeks each semester. This year they hope for radio and T.V. coverage to help them reach their goal.

They have already assured themselves a good deal of coverage by getting two of the most popular local acts to perform. New Horizons, a fantastic reggae band, are well known and respected by all Valley dwellers that know anything about reggae music.

Mini Bus Sandwitch is comprised of mostly UMass students and graduates. Their recent Twister's appearance resulted in the longest lines of people waiting to get in that the club has seen in some time. The band, with a heavy guitar sound, ranges in covers such as Jimi Hendrix's "Hey Joe" to their own originals.

So will Mini Bus Sandwitch.

In addition to New Horizons and Mini Bus Sandwich, who the fraternity said were extremely willing to help with the benefit, the concert will feature a UMass band called the Shockers.

Donations can be made directly to Jessie's House, 143 West St., Northampton MA 01060, or to Amherst Friends for the Homeless, P.O. Box 1071, Amherst, MA 01004.

"It's up to the senators at this point."

Talbot added, "Right now, I would say the motion looks favorable, and it will probably pass next week."

In other SGA news:

- The following senators resigned from their positions: Kimball Cartwright (Grayson), Rick Revelle (Brown) and Daniel Beane, resigning from his position (Sylvan), was appointed to represent Brown.
- Other senators appointed include: Ari Weinstein (Commuters), Dave Luessler (Greeks), Christine Phaneuf and Jennifer Rummell (Greek Area co-senators), Cary Guigere (Webster) and David Gagne (Sylvan).
- Edward Smith and O'Neil Hardy were re-appointed to their seats from Third World Caucus.

powder form of aloe in an amount that would not be significant enough to affect a person's health.

"If a person is not already watching their diet and exercising, then Aloaide is not going to make a difference," he said.

Dr. Edward Davis, a professor of botany at UMass, said aloe does help in soothing skin, but ingesting a piece of the plant may irritate the large intestine.

When asked whether the plant in the powder form could affect the large intestine in the same way, Davis said that he was unsure. He said he was unsure of the health benefits of aloe as well.

"How effective [the health benefits] are, I'd be hesitant to say," he said. Francis said he has been very pleased with his dealings with Seemayer, but he "would be very unhappy if [Seemayer] did use a strong marketing gimmick."

of the policy which does not currently cover the Israeli bonds."

Earlier this month the Collegian uncovered evidence that UMass still owned stocks and bonds listed with the Investors Responsibility Research Center in Washington, D.C., a company which monitors business ties to South Africa.

Investments in at least eight companies were determined by students to violate University investment policy.

Dennis Madson, vice chancellor for student affairs, said the University has sold stocks in the eight companies students indicated had ties to South Africa.

Kishawi conceded that the administration has met most of the student demands including listing companies with the IRRC, divesting from the companies cited to be in violation of the policy and placing a portfolio list of University investments in the library. "We still do not see much of a progress, but at least they're making an initiative," he said.

"We are pleased with the students' attitude and this way of making change," Madson said, "We want and hope we don't have to go to a 'massive escalation of force.'"

At a rally last week, students threatened a "massive escalation of force" if the administration did not respond to all of their demands.

for a prayer and some even make trips to the nearest mosque in West Springfield.

al-Shinguity said that the fast does not interfere with school work at the University. "I become more productive because I don't have to think about going to get some food," he said. On some occasions he said he even breaks the fast at his evening classes.

al-Shinguity's wife Iman, an American convert to Islam, said that fasting for a month is not that difficult after overcoming the first couple of days.

"It is a degree of spirituality that you put in it," she said. "Some people see it as hunger. But part of Ramadan is to make us more compassionate and gives us a degree of understanding of what having no food is like. If you think spiritually, hunger becomes a source of strength."

by the boycott.

"The U.W.F. boycott is sweeping the nation. We need to take it past Louis' Foods. We are the consumers. We spent our money in their stores. Only if we hit them in the pocketbook are we going to make a change," McQuilken said.

Everyone can prevent environmental destruction in simple ways every day, he said. He suggested recycling, using paper bags, and using less water and paper as ways to prevent waste production.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Investigate a job offer. Reading gives you the information you need. Finish all work projects on time. An athletic contest attracts your attention. Use a more subtle approach in romance.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You will have to meet your own standards if you expect others to do so. A promotion is near. Stand up for your rights! Stop letting a difficult relative push you around.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Experts can show you the quickest way out of a financial dilemma. Refuse to be pressured by someone who has selfish motives. Romance begins to sparkle. Be willing to play a waiting game.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Work seems more demanding now. You are in high spirits, though, and enjoy the challenge. Tell the truth and patch up your differences with a loved one. Speak from the heart.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): If you learn not to expect so much, you will be disappointed less often. Cooperative ventures pay off royally. Call a close friend. A family member offers encouragement when you are uncertain.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You will enjoy good fortune once you finally make that decision you have been postponing. Adverse influences disappear; cooperation proves easier to obtain. You and your loved ones draw closer.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You have an urge to change residences or jobs. Use your imagination to inspire others to be creative. Mate has some surprises in store for you. Face a feeling of restlessness head-on.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Take advantage of this quiet day to catch up on business chores. Answer the mail and return pone calls. If you want someone new in your life, look around. Join social groups.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): An unexpected visit by a member of the opposite sex could upset your romantic partner. You have an opportunity to upgrade an investment. To avoid being deceived, keep your eyes and ears open.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You feel both excited and energetic today. Those who are close to you want to help in any way they can. A low-key approach wins you that special job. Enjoy socializing tonight.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A romantic relationship will be more meaningful when you come down from the clouds. Make plans for the future. The business outlook is much improved. Do not go overboard when shopping.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A relationship that has been sluggish seems to pick up. You feel inspired by something you hear or see today. Act on the business information you already have; it will be enough.

Israeli/Third World ties may improve via agriculture

By DARREN GARNICK
Collegian Staff

Israel has an obligation to share its agricultural expertise with developing nations, a top Israeli scientist said last night.

Dr. Jonathan Donhaye, an agricultural entomologist working on the World Hunger Project at Brown University, told a small crowd in the Campus Center that because Israel has received a lot of help from other nations, it should return the gesture to countries in need.

Since the early 1970s, Israel has had agricultural operations in several central African nations, many of which have no diplomatic ties with Jerusalem, he said.

Although the Israeli government hopes agricultural cooperation will eventually lead to friendship with other countries, Donhaye said, achieving tangible diplomatic results is a long way off.

"We don't have to talk politics, we can talk about the subject that is really interesting: agriculture," Donhaye said.

According to Donhaye, 40,000 trainees from 112 different nations have come to Israel since the late 1960s to study irrigation, food storage and farming efficiency. In addition, 50,000 farmers have been trained in their own countries by traveling Israeli scientists, he said.

Donhaye said Israel's success in overcoming limited land and water resources to grow food can be applied to nations facing similar agricultural obstacles.

"In spite of our small size, Israel has been a melting pot of agricultural innovations, many of which can be adapted to the Third World because of our similar climates," he said.

In the Negev desert, Donhaye said, scientists have developed techniques to desalinate soil and water. Israel has conquered the problem of insect infestation with plastic grain silos, he said.

"So much emphasis is placed on increasing the amount of food, yet it is so logical to first save what is being spoiled," Donhaye said.

Insects are the main contributors to food spoilage in developing nations, he said.

"In stored products, insects multiply at a 5,000 percent rate per month," he said. "Within four months, you get six million insects from one pair."

Hermetically sealed plastic silos cut off the insects' oxygen supply before they can breed, Donhaye said. This same food preservation principle has been used since ancient times with underground storage silos, he said.

Donhaye, who has been to Nepal twice to introduce plastic silos, said at the United Nation's request, Israel has supplied plastic "storage cubes" for emergency relief in Ethiopia and Mozambique.

Donhaye's talk was sponsored by the University of Massachusetts Student Alliance for Israel in honor of Earth Day.

UMass Holocaust Memorial Week to start Monday

By CHRIS MUTHER
Collegian Staff

Holocaust Memorial Week, which has been celebrated for over five years at the University of Massachusetts, begins Monday with a Commemorative Service at noon in the Cape Cod Lounge.

Centering around the Jewish holiday Yom Ha-Shoah on April 22, Holocaust Memorial Week commemorates the millions of people who were killed in concentration camps during the reign of Hitler, said Mark Adler, chairman of the UMass Holocaust Memorial Week.

The holiday Yom Ha-Shoah is used for Holocaust Memorial Week because it is connected to the Warsaw Ghetto Uprisings of April 1943 and Hitler's birthdate of April 21, Adler said.

He said the theme of the week "Remember the Present" was chosen because it is "cryptic in purpose."

"We want people to remember what happened, but we also want them to realize these things aren't completely gone, anti-Semitism is still highly prevalant." he said.

The national uprisings in Eastern Europe have led to a new surge of anti-Semitism in those ares, Adler said. Former Communist countries in Eastern Europe are also facing strong anti-Semitic sentiment as well.

He said there have been threats of a pogrom, a massacre of Jewish people, on May 5 in the Soviet Union in addition to other recent anti-Semetic actions in Eastern Europe.

He said the grey stripes and the yellow star of David on this year's Holocaust Memorial Week posters and buttons represent the uniforms worn by prisioners in concentration camps.

The week is sponsored by the UMass Holocaust Memorial Week Committee, Hillel, the Graduate Senate, the Undergratuate Senate and the Office of Human Affairs.

Holocaust Memorial Week Schedule of Events

A state vehicle travelling on the walkway adjacent to the Campus Center struck a pedestrian Tuesday crossing in front of the vehicle.

The pedestrian was taken to University Health Services for examination after complaining of a shoulder injury.

In other police reports:

LARCENY

- Police discovered a stereo system torn from the dash of a vehicle in E Lot Monday after receiving a report of a vehicle with a smashed window.
- A man reported the theft of the tire and wheel from his vehicle parked in E Lot Tuesday. The loss is estimated at $425.
- A man reported Tuesday that the license plate from his vehicle in E Lot was stolen.

Celtics' Bird grounded following minor surgery

BOSTON (AP) — Larry Bird of the Boston Celtics was hospitalized yesterday after undergoing minor surgery for an abscess on his buttocks.

Dr. Arnold Scheller, the Celtics' physician, said an incision was made and the abscess drained at New England Baptist Hospital.

"All we did was pop it," Scheller said.

Bird scored 23 points while playing 45 minutes in Boston's 111-105 loss at Chicago Tuesday night and went to the hospital after the team returned home yesterday.

Scheller said that the abscess had been bothering Bird since last Sunday and "he started to develop a fever, that means it's starting to spread," the doctor said. "That's what we mean by systemic."

Scheller said that Bird "will probably be in the hospital for 24 to 48 hours" for intravenous antibiotic treatment.

Bird, who is averaging 24.3 points and 9.5 rebounds for the Celtics, missed a game with the Orlando Magic last night.

Scheller said that Bird was questionable for a game with the Chicago Bulls in Boston Garden tomorrow night, but probable for Sunday's regular season finale in Philadelphia.

centering pass from McAleavey and beating Banks.

At 2:04 it was Codignotto (three goals, team-high 25 on the season) scoring on another 1-on-1 move. Chris Bates scored his first of two goals at 3:40 to get Dartmouth on the board, and nobody scored until O'Callaghan (goal, two assists) bolted straight downfield with his long stick and burned Banks upstairs at 11:42.

Alex Robertson's tally at 1:10 of the second quarter made it 3-2 and Dartmouth held to that until Codignotto's steal and breakaway goal just 1:53 before the half ended a drought of more than a quarter without a UMass goal.

Stuff: Just a reminder that Saturday's game against Army (this is always a big game, folks) will be played at The Hill, and not at Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium as originally scheduled . . . the latest screw-up by this writer had UMass and Syracuse playing on May 7, when actually it's May 6 (whatever the date, it's on a Sunday at 4 p.m.). Stay tuned, there will surely be more goofs in the next 38 days.

The jayvee lacrosse club won two of its three games last week, beating Brown (11-4) and Williams (8-7 in OT) before falling to Yale (9-5).

Against Brown, the Baby Gorillas opened up a 3-3 halftime duel to win going away. Mike Broggi and Bill Robinson each netted three goals, followed by Jon Riber with two and Reid Russell, Shane Carter and Paul Cronin with one each.

Monday, the UMass jayvees host Westfield State at Lower Boyden (4:30 p.m.).

Second half surge gives Gorillas 15-6 win

UMass pulls away for 19th straight win over Dartmouth

Rich Senatore scored the first goal in yesterday's 15-6 Gorilla win over Dartmouth in Hanover, N.H.

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

HANOVER, N.H. — One of these days, the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team is going to play for 60 minutes — and when it does, watch out.

Yesterday, the Gorillas languished through a slow and sluggish first half before finally turning on the jets and pulling away for a 15-6 win over Dartmouth College at Chase Field.

UMass had trouble cranking up the offense in the first half on a windy and frigid day, playing on a field that looked more suited for pig farming (actually, Dartmouth chose to play on that field, leaving the adjacent better-conditioned field for a jayvee game against Northfield Mount-Hermon — slight priority problems, maybe?).

Eerily reminiscent to last year's close call (11-10 UMass OT win) when Dartmouth came to Amherst and almost lulled UMass to sleep with a slowdown tempo, the Gorillas could manage only a 3-1 lead after one quarter and 4-2 at the half.

"It was a lot like last year," UMass coach Dick Garber said. "They were a tough, scrappy team."

Style and flair was not the order of the day in the mud bowl, play being stopped once when a scramble caused the ball to be buried in the turf.

But UMass opened the third quarter with a bang, scoring four goals in a span of 1:16 to steal the upset hopes of the Big Green (1-5), who now have lost 19 straight to UMass.

The game also saw one of the better defensive efforts of the year for the Gorillas, holding Dartmouth to just three goals until midway through the fourth quarter. Partly responsible was sophomore goalie Ray Suris, getting his second collegiate start and coming up with nine saves in the game.

True, the Big Green don't have the reputation as an offensive power under first-year coach Tim Nelson, who used to score six goals in a game himself when he was an All-American attacker at Syracuse a few years back.

After the Gorillas had just killed a slashing penalty on Kenny Randazzo (one of 12 infractions on the day — still a UM sore spot), junior attack Jim McAleavey found senior midfielder Jamie Bergan cutting down the middle to make it 5-2 at 3:16.

Then, the floodgates opened.

Senior midfielder Tim Soudan scored his only goal at 3:51 on a long-distance crank from Bergan, and senior attack Rob Codignotto spun off a defender and rolled a grounder past Dartmouth goalie John Banks.

McAleavey's goal, one of four to go along with two assists on the day, made it 8-2 at 4:47. Nelson had watched enough and called time, but it didn't really matter.

On a restart from the end line, McAleavey faked his defender into the soggy turf and rolled out from the left post for an easy goal and a 9-2 lead. After Brett Morrison finally broke the run for Dartmouth, McAleavey, Marc Feinberg and Frank Pepe finished the third quarter onslaught for a 12-3 lead.

"We really turned it on in the third quarter," Garber said.

McAleavey, who leads the team with 50 points on the year (22 goals, 28 assists), finished his afternoon 32 seconds into the final quarter with a wide-open goal from Hugh O'Callaghan. Freshmen attackmen Mark Millon and Mario Guaglianone closed the scoring for the Gorillas.

For a while, it looked like UMass would start the same way it finished. Junior attack Rich Senatore opened the scoring just 49 seconds into the game, taking a point-blank

Baseball ready for duel against rival Springfield

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

Does the Springfield College baseball get excited about playing the University of Massachusetts?

"It's the seventh game of the World Series and the Super Bowl all wrapped into one for them," said UMass coach Mike Stone.

Today, Stone's Minutemen host the Chiefs at Lorden Field (3 p.m.)

UMass comes into the game playing its best ball of the season. The Minutemen are 17-11, and 8-2 in the last 10 games.

"Players are coming through in the clutch, guys are concentrating instead of worrying about the stress, and they're doing the job," Stone said.

Two guys who have been "coming through" are Daryle Corriveau and Glenn DiSarcina. Corriveau started slow losing his first three decisions, but lately he has been superb, blanking Boston University, and throwing a three-hitter against Holy Cross.

"We knew Daryle was a good pitcher, the big thing was getting his confidence back," Stone said. "[The game against] BU was a big win for him, he was able to get his breaking ball over and overpower hitters."

DiSarcina was benched by Stone for two games aginst BU and UConn. The sophomore shortstop was struggling at the plate and in the field, so Stone decided to give him a couple of days to relax. Upon reinsertion to the starting lineup, DiSarcina has exploded with three home runs.

"He [DiSarcina] had played a lot and needed some time off," Stone said. "He's responded with fire in his eyes."

Springfield College is 7-17, losers of two straight, the latest catastrophe came against Dartmouth 4-2. On paper, this shapes up as a mismatch, and if UMass plays up to par, they should win.

The Minutemen send Rob Graziano to the hill. Graziano has not been involved in a decision this season, and has had his share of control problems. The sophomore right-hander has walked 10 in seven-plus innings. "We're hoping Rob can get on track [today]," Stone said.

With four games against Rutgers this weekend Stone would like nothing more than to get a complete game from Graziano. Rutgers and UMass are currently tied for first place in the A-10 (both teams are 7-1 in the conference).

"This is what it's all about, the two best teams fighting it out for first place," Stone said. Rutgers over the weekend, and Springfield College today, this is the pinnacle point of the regular season.

Field notes: Three UMass players each have five homers: Brian Bright, Mike Tobin and DiSarcina. Bright has been stuck on five for 14 games, but still is batting .307.

Drew Comeau's bat has come alive, he leads the team with a .397 average, and 22 RBIs. Tobin and Ian Torres are second with 21 ribbies, and Tobin is stroking the ball at .386, while Torres is at .333.

Apologies to Derek Dana and Lou Olivieri, the UMass catchers who have taken a lot of heat for the number of runners who are stealing bases. Dana and Olivieri have thrown out only seven runners in 46 attempts. It's time for the pitching staff to shoulder some of the blame. Opposing runners are getting great jumps and slow pitches to run on, making the task of gunning down ducks almost impossible.

Stat of the week: For lack of a more interesting stat — in 16 innings of work, Jerry Creamer has allowed just four hits.

Booker aims for new heights at NCAAs tonight

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

Exactly five months after his first meet of the 1989-90 season, University of Massachusetts sophomore gymnast Cal Booker will compete in the biggest meet of his two-year career at the NCAA finals at the University of Minnesota tonight.

Booker placed fifth in floor exercises in the NCAA Eastern Regionals finals at Penn State on April 7. He also placed 11th on vaulting, giving him a spot among the select 12 in the East who qualified for the national finals.

"I think he should shoot for the top eight in both events," UMass coach Roy Johnson said.

Booker indicated that he would like to place in the top five in both events.

"I'll have to hit everything [on floor]," Booker said. "I've added a little more difficulty on my routine."

Booker's season began to turn around after a Feb. 18 meet at Temple University, where he was the Minuteman's high scorer. The talented sophomore also scored a team record 9.8 on floor against Syracuse on March 3.

A week after his record-setting performance against Syracuse, Booker tied with Southern Connecticut's Shawn Simpson for the New England championship on floor with a 9.45. Booker appeared to have won the championship outright with a score of 9.5, but the judges dropped his score after consulting each other.

Booker has brought a strong background to UMass, having competed as a member of the United States Gymnastics Federation throughout his four years of high school. USGF competition is a developmental program to provide fundamental skills for promising young gymnasts, according to Johnson.

"I think [USGF] is harder than high school," Booker said. "It helped me get basics so that I could develop my harder skills easier."

Booker also credited his USGF coach, Tom Fontecchio, for encouraging him to attend UMass.

With a strong past, Booker also has a potentially brighter future. His success bodes well for the future of a UMass team which is losing four seniors to graduation, including co-captains John Eggers and Bart Balocki.

"I knew I could do it [qualify]," Booker said. "Finally doing it has completely changed my attitude.

"I want to make [NCAA finals] in all six events next year," continued Booker. "He's got a good chance of being one of the top all-arounders in the country next year," Johnson said.

Before looking to next year, Booker still has some business to finish up tonight in Minneapolis.

Cal Booker, seen here in action earlier this season, will compete in the NCAA championships tonight at the University of Minnesota.

Other UM sports action

In other University of Massachusetts sports action today, the women's lacrosse team tries to snap its four-game losing streak when it takes on the University of Vermont at 3:30 p.m at Totman Field.

Today's game is the makeup of a game that was rained out on April 4. The Gazelles are 2-8 on the season.

Also, the UMass women's tennis team plays its first home match of the season today when it hosts the University of Hartford. The match will begin at 3 p.m. at the Upper Boyden Courts.

Tomorrow, the softball team kicks off a big weekend of sports action when it hosts the University of Maine in a 3 p.m. doubleheader at Totman Field.

THIS WEEKEND

We've got the whole world at UMass

By G. CURTIS AUSTIN IV
Collegian Staff

It is not often that someone can get a little taste of what 35 countries are like, especially in one room.

With the help of the International Students Association, a student, alumnus or local resident can discover cultures from all over the world in the Campus Center Auditorium Saturday, at International Fair 1990, sponsored by the Association.

ISA has invited the rest of the world to visit UMass for a day, to bring all the tradition that has developed in those nations over the past couple thousand years.

People will wear national traditional dress, perform dances and prepare dishes that are unique to their own regions.

People from places that are thousands of miles apart, like Nigeria and Armenia will be just a few feet apart from people from Mexico and Panama, who will have tables set up in the auditorium Saturday.

"This year's event on April 21 is an opportunity for students from all the nations, represented at UMass, to display their cultural wealth and heritage," Carmen Marquez, public relations director for ISA, said.

Students will also present slide shows, videotapes, and crafts from other nations.

Last year's show, highlighted by African dancers, drew some 4000 people for the annual event.

The fair will be held from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. tomorrow. All kinds of food will be served, ranging from egg rolls to pita bread to sushi.

Following the fair, a dance will be held from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. in the auditorium.

ISA is an organization that promotes the understanding and friendly relations among the members of different nationalities at the University, and between those nationalities and the surrounding communities.

So, if you don't have thousands of dollars to hop a plane to Japan or Chile or Sweden to explore a culture that is so different than your own, take a visit to the fair.

This vacation doesn't cost a penny.

Troupe offers a womb with a pro-choice view

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian Staff

It's that time of year. Everyone's looking for apartments for next year. Room for Rent signs are everywhere.

Residential Arts is offering something a little different, and no security deposit is required. Sleeveless Theatre is presenting its pro-choice comedy sensation, Womb for Rent tomorrow and Saturday night at Hampden Theatre.

Sleeveless Theater, who have successfully performed Womb in the area many times before, consists of Maureen Futtner, Alexis Greenblatt, Terianne Falcone, K.D. Halpin, Lisa Channer and Kate Nugent. Their purpose for performing the vaudevillian-style revue is to provide comic relief to the proponents of reproductive rights.

For instance, one of the sketches in the revue spoofs Operation Rescue, a group that protests in front of abortion clinics and harasses people trying to get inside.

The show has also been updated to include sketches based on the recent Webster Supreme Court decision which gave states complete control on the issue of abortion.

It's not easy to poke fun at such serious issues, but the women of Sleeveless Theater pull it off wonderfully.

Sleeveless Theater is currently working on several new projects. They plan to have a new full length show, War: The Comedy, open in July. The revue will include many sketches, including Falcone's "Two Women and an Apple: The Story of Pandora and Eve." The sketch weaves in the story of Adam and Eve with the Greek myth of Pandora.

Sleeveless Theater's Womb for Rent will be performed at UMass Hampden Theatre tomorrow and Saturday night at 8 p.m. Tickets are $5 to $7. For reservations, call 545-2511.

McClinton: blues god

By NICK OSTIS
Collegian Correspondent

Delbert McClinton plays Pearl Street tonight.

Delbert McClinton can hardly recall a time when he wasn't singing. In fact, for the past 30 years, he has performed 200 to 300 shows a year. Touring to support his first major label release in 10 years, I'm With You on Capitol/Curb Records, the rhythm n' blues ambassador from Texas storms into Pearl Street in Northampton tonight with an all-star band to complement his passionate, drawl-drenched vocals. His band includes former Roy Orbison bassist Jimmy Johnson, former Wet Willie keyboardist Mike Duke, former Asleep at the Wheel drummer Wes Starr, plus two horn players.

Listed in the Rock Book of Lists as one of the 20 best harmonica players in the world (he tutored John Lennon in England in the early '60s), McClinton loves what he does: it's his mission, his life, his reason to be.

"It's the kind of music that makes you want to forget all your problems and have a good time — get up and dance even if you can't," he said. "If it wasn't for a few people, the flame of this particular kind of music might have died. I like to think I'm helping to keep it alive."

Bonnie Raitt is one of those few people, winning four Grammys this year. His response: "To see Bonnie get her due makes us all feel worthwhile."

Just how fervent is this roadhouse rocker about his job?

"I've come off the stage every place across the country and helped people move tables and chairs out of the way and insisted they dance, and inevitably it makes the whole night a lot more fun for everybody."

Fortunately, Pearl Street has a huge wooden dance floor so McClinton can save his energy to entertain. And he is a master at it.

He works regularly because his live shows are so cathartic, but he has enjoyed a recording highlight or two as well. In 1978, Emmylou Harris scored a number one country hit with his "Two More Bottles of Wine." John Belushi and Dan Ackroyd, as the Blues Brothers, recorded his tune "B Movie."

McClinton's recording of his own "Giving It up for Your Love" was a 1980 top 10 hit.

Northampton's Herschler Brothers open the show. Doors open at 8:30 p.m. for the 21-and-over show. Tickets are $10 at the door.

Phunky phresh phun phor rainphorest

By JACK THOMPSON
Collegian Correspondent

The Phurst Church of Phun awaits you to happen with it! This is your invitation to the "Most Unusual Rock and Roll Event on the Planet." It's just two more days away, this Saturday, April 21, at 9 p.m. in the Hampshire Dining Commons.

What is it?

The Phurst Church of Phun will be an experience for all who are there.

Here's the picture: There will be musicians, and you, a light show, and you, poets, and you. Also, dancers, and you, clowns, and you, jugglers, and you. Not to mention magicians, and you, comedians, and you, Wavy Gravy, and you, and hundreds of others — like you, costumed and participating, performing with each other in the same building at the same time! The rock music will be provided by Midnight Sun, featuring a former member from New Riders of the Purple Sage.

Who's involved?

One of the people putting it together is John Dwork. John runs the "Speed of Light Show" which will be going on during Saturday night. John's "Speed of Light Show" has been called the "most visionary multi-media experience." He says you might call this event a "conscious party." It's not only a guaranteed great time, but it will "help heal the planet," John says. Of course it will also be exciting, creative and fun (or phun) . . .

Why?

The proceeds from your $6 ticket will go toward buying endangered rainforest in Central and South America, and holding it in trust. Some proceeds will go to a park in Guatamala, and some to the Atlantic Forest in Brazil. (The forest in Brazil is home to a rare species of monkey, found only in two or three other parts of the world).

John hopes the "Phurst Church of Phun helps heal the planet and human suffering." He and some friends believe this event will combine fun and fashionability in "creating art that heals." Not only will money go to saving rainforest, it will help here at home, too. Some money will be used for helping local homeless people.

What is a meta-phor?

A good metaphor for the evening is: When you dance, each step saves another tree and helps feed another mouth. John says, "It is possible to serve yourself and serve others in the process."

According to someone who was there last year (this is the second "Phurst Church of Phun" in a row) "It was a great time — unbelievable." He went on, but take my word for it, there will be more fun (or phun) than you can imagine. Of course, we can try to imagine anyway. It promises to be a "giant ritual of Phun," John says. Like, a "Wall of Words," a "Sensorium" and other stuff.

Philosophy

The idea is to combine many forms of expression simultaneously. Through this process of breaking down the usual modes of communication, people may create enough chaos to allow a higher form of order to take place. That's the theory behind the whole thing; just as in nature there appears to be no pattern to water evaporating, a closer look reveals clouds taking shape.

So it is with the Phurst Church of Phun. Open mikes with feedback loops and music, art, poetry, dancing, etc., etc., may snap into a really clear message. Possibly a "group-trance", you know. But you have to be there to get it!

Ways to prepare

Dress for comfortable ecstacy; be flexible in a new role; maintain an open mind. You can bring musical instruments, poetry, vocal characterizations or anything else "Phunny." Dance in X-tacy, participate in a "Phun-Phactory," and think of each act as a tree saved and a homeless person helped. In other words, "Think Globally, Act Locally." (The bus is about to pull up, are you on or off? You never know who else might show up; be a part of the movie)

BOG amendment eliminated

Appointed representaives will retain voting status

By DARREN GARNICK
Collegian Staff

A constitutional amendment to strip voting privileges from appointed minority seats on the Board of Governors was eliminated last night from the BOG's plans for structural reform.

Vice Chairperson Ed Corrigan had proposed last week to make the seven appointed representives on the Board — Third World Caucus (3 seats), Lesbian Bisexual Gay Alliance (2 seats), Abilities Unlimited (1 seat) and Stockbridge (1 seat) — non-voting members.

Corrigan said he was opposed to any appointed seats because members of those communities are free to run for election in the residential areas and for at-large seats.

"This was not meant as an attack on any group or any members of the Board," he said. "I'm disappointed that it was taken as such." About 10 students opposed to Corrigan's motion gathered at the BOG meeting waiting to debate the proposal. However, the expected conflict was averted after Gov. Bill Hewitt offered a "friendly amendment" to delete the passages which took away those seats' voting privileges.

Gov. Beth Dacey of the Third World Caucus said she is skeptical of Corrigan's original intent to take away her vote.

"I am always cautious and on guard about [the status of] these seats," she said. "I feel these seats are repeatedly attacked and are constantly in jeopardy."

During the meeting's closing comments, Gov. Peter Simm of the LBGA said he has repeatedly received "dirty looks" from other Board members because he is gay. Simm declined to give names, but said this "lack of acceptance" reinforces the need for the LBGA seats.

Gov. Tracy Sliwa, also from the LBGA, said the controversy raises the question of why appointed seats exist for some minority groups and not others. She said the Hispanic, Asian and Jewish communities at the University of Massachusetts also deserve seats.

Next week the BOG plans to vote on a constitutional amendment to establish an appointed seat representing the Jewish community. Gov. Mark Adler proposed the amendment last night because he said "anti-Semitism is on the rise and Jews need to assert themselves."

Adler said although there is Jewish representation on the BOG now, there are no guarantees in the future. "I don't see anti-Semitism on the Board, but I see a potential for it," he said.

The rest of Corrigan's proposed reforms involved redistributing the BOG seats in proportion to the student population. The Board voted to indefinitely postpone the approval of those reforms, saying they needed more time to study the demographics.

Child pornography and censorship laws discussed

By DIANE HICKS
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts Educator Advocate Jessica Cates voiced mixed feelings regarding Tuesday's U.S. Supreme Court decision which handed states the power to restrict the private possession or viewing of child pornography.

According to a report in the Boston Globe, Justice Byron White said, "The law was enacted in order to protect the victims of child pornography, and hopes to destroy a market for the exploitative use of children."

Cates agreed that children aren't capable of making the decision to participate in the making of pornography, yet said, "the women often don't really have a choice either, but in a different sense."

Many women are forced into pornography because of their economic situation she said, and pointed out that women in snuff films are killed at the end of the film, adding that obviously these women didn't consent to being tortured and killed.

In response to the law, Justice William J. Brennan Jr. filed a dissent. He was quoted by the Globe as having said, "If the first Amendment means anything , it means the state has no business telling a man, sitting alone in his own home, what books he may read or what films he may watch."

Regarding Brennan's dissent, Cates said "I personally also have a problem with censorship" yet later added, "it's a different thing when someone's body is being used for their free speech."

Cates said it was doubtful that a ban on the material would actually stop the industry, adding "there's such an underground for everything."

"The heart of the matter is why people are reading [pornography] and why they don't think there is something wrong with it."

T.A.s hold Whitmore 'teach in'

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

Some 25 teaching assistants held classes in the halls of the Whitmore Administration building yesterday in the first of a three-day 'teach in' to reject President/Chancellor Duffey's press for a 'fast and fair' union election.

Organizers said the high visibility campaign, which will continue today and on Monday, is expected to draw some 75 teaching assistants and their students. Some 2,500 graduate students work at the University and about half are members of the Graduate Employee Organization.

Renee Heberle, a GEO spokeswoman, said the 'teach in' is part of an effort to build momentum for an act of civil disobedience planned for Tuesday.

"The point is to make [the administration] uncomfortable with their position regarding the union," Heberle said. "It is simply to remind them of the work that we do, that we are professionals and that we care about the students."

On Tuesday, Heberle said more than 150 graduate students plan to lie down in front of the administration building's doors and block the entrances from 7 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.

After initially refusing to recognize the GEO, President/Chancellor Duffey accepted the UMass board of trustees' recommendation two weeks ago that he schedule an election to determine who will represent them.

However, Duffey issued three conditions for an election which Heberle said are 'unacceptable.'

The conditions are: that the Office of Employee Relations would decide whether both state-funded and federally-funded graduate student employees are eligible to vote, that a majority of the graduate student employees vote, and that any organiztion representing graduate students, even one that is not a collective bargaining unit, could be listed on the ballot.

"That's not the way union elections are run anywhere," said Seth Rothberg, 34, a teaching assistant in the English department.

"If it took the majority of eligible voters to vote for one person, you wouldn't have a president of the United States," he said.

UMass spokeswoman Karin Sherbin said administrators are 'optimistic' that a compromise can be reached to avoid Tuesday's action. "People were still expressing optimism that some sort of common ground will be met by then," she said.

Starting in 1976, there have been several unsuccessful bids for union recognition by graduate student employees. Last spring, teaching assistants held a two-day 'teach in' which drew some 200 instructors and their classes.

The turning point came last November, however, when the GEO took advantage of an undergraduate student strike to protest state budget cuts and increased its membership numbers. Weeks later, the GEO voted to become affiliated with District 65/United Auto Workers.

'Straight Pride' flyer protested by LBGA

By CHRIS MUTHER
Collegian Staff

A flyer advertising this Tuesday's 'Straight Pride' rally, similar to one found to be disciminatory by the Office of Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity, is being protested by the Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay Alliance.

The poster, which depicts two figures engaged in anal intercourse with a bar across them, is an advertisment for the first 'Straight Pride Rally' being sponsored by the University of Massachusetts chapter of Young Americans for Freedom.

According to Suzanne Jean, associate director of Student Activities, a similar graphic used three years ago on a flyer that said 'Stop AIDS' was found to be discriminatory and illegal. A memo issued in May, 1987 by the Office of Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity said the graphic is "discriminatory against individuals of a particular sexual orientation" and "is designed to incite individuals to take action against individuals who are homosexual."

Jean said the poster was not sanctified by the Young Americans for Freedom and they were put up by only two members of the group without the rest of the organization knowing.

■ pornography

Cates pointed out that pornographic images are not natural and often involve violence, citing the word comes form the root "porn" which means "female sexual slavery."

"Pornography is an influence, just like advertising," she said, "but the problem lays not in changing the laws around it but in changing the whole world, and the attitude."

Coffin: make peace

Global unity stressed by SANE president

By CHRIS SHADOIAN
Collegian Correspondent

Global unification is the goal that all countries on earth must work toward during the 1990s, according to Reverend William Sloane Coffin, who spoke Wednesday night at Hampshire College. Coffin, the president of SANE/FREEZE, a world peace organization, said there are several ways the human race can obtain world peace, but stressed nuclear disarmament, world ecology, the end of the age of fossil fuels and the elimination of poverty as means by which mankind can reach this ultimate goal.

Coffin, in a lecture titled "Toward 2000: Peacemaking in a Changing world," said the 1990s are the time to work for global unity because there are so many changes going on in the political and social world. He asked who would have predicted such events as the release of Nelson Mandela from prison in South Africa or the reunification of East and West Germany.

"These are winds of change of gale force," Coffin said. He added that these are favorable winds and that with care, there are so many possibilities for mankind.

However, Coffin stressed the necessity of nuclear disarmament as the world's top priority for the coming decade. He said that if the use and modernization of nuclear weapons continues, eventually every country on earth will have access to these weapons.

"The world must become nuclear free or become a nuclear porcupine," Coffin said.

Coffin said disarmament must also be accompanied by world peace; ultimately, war must be abolished as well, because the knowledge of how to make nuclear weapons will always be there and during wartime, the temptation any one country might have to use nuclear weapons would simply be too great.

Coffin said he is optimistic of the prospects of disarmament in the near future, but he also sees other means by which mankind can gain international unification. One of these is working toward improvements of the world's ecology, he said.

"Nature, however forgiving, cannot long cope with what we leave in our wake," Coffin said. Problems such as the depletion of the ozone layer and the dumping of toxic wastes in the oceans could factor heavily in working towards global unity, he said.

There are, of course, other world problems that should be addressed that can also lead ultimately to worldwide unification, he said. The most obvious of these problems, according to Coffin, is poverty in the world today.

Since the end of World War II, the world has failed to try to narrow the gap between rich and poor, he said. "Today, it is a chasm," he added. "There's no end in sight to this global apartheid."

Coffin combined his talk on ending world poverty with the end of the age of fossil fuels. Latin American countries all share the sun, he said. Through the use of solar power, poverty could be completely abolished in that particular area of the world. "The solar age is just around the corner," he said. "We must move ahead."

A former minister of Riverside Church in New York and an internationally known advocate of peace and human rights, Coffin said he is optimistic of the possible changes in the world in the near future. "The 1990s could be quite spectacular."

Duffey asks faculty to tell statehouse of budget woes

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
Collegian Staff

Chancellor/President Joseph Duffey called yesterday for faculty members to help the administration impress upon statehouse legislators the impact budget cuts have made at the University of Massachusetts and the need for increased taxes.

Speaking at the Faculty Senate meeting, Duffey said legislators he has spoken to recognize the role of the higher education system in the Massachusetts economy but are being bombarded from all sides by human services, Medicare and other agencies dependent on state funds.

"There is a paralysis in Massachusetts government," he said. "But education is not a problem but an answer to the economy."

Duffey said recent student activism in Boston has been effective at getting the message out but pressure will still need need to be applied in the next critical period — when students are home and a tax package is debated in the statehouse.

Later in the meeting, Provost O'Brien presented a review of faculty retirements. He said that 32 professors took advantage of the early retirement program which began last year at the University.

He said an additional 24 faculty vacancies are expected due to various other factors such as regular retirement and sabbaticals. He said as of this month 56 potential slots remain to be filled.

O'Brien said the University is appointing 23 regular teaching positions and 11 more professors under a program to promote minorites.

"There will be at least 34 new faces at the University next year," he said. "We are not totally stagnant, even though indications seem to point in that directions. We are continuing to function."

O'Brien also reported to the roughly 50 senators in attendance that professors up for tenure have been "extraordinarily good" cases. He read several quotations from the reports which all extolled the professors as "outstanding" in their fields of linguistics and electrical and computer engineering.

"We must attend to keep these faculty members and with them we can survive this storm [budget cuts] around us," he said.

Gender issues discussed

Speaker urges black women to unite

By MARY ANNE ANTONELLIS
Collegian Correspondent

Black women should come together to think about how they have arrived at their place in society, said the founder and executive director of the National Black Women's Health Project last night at Amherst College.

"Black women need to claim who they are and black women must understand we were not put on this earth to be messed with," said Byllye Avery.

Avery spoke to an audience of 80 people on issues of racial and gender oppression.

She said that if racial and gender barriers are going to be erased, people need to first look inside themselves.

"You can only change yourself and by changing yourself you change how the world responds to you," she said.

Avery said to the men in the audience that when they hear about male violence against women and don't defend the women then they're supporting the violence.

White men must network with other white men on issues of racism and sexism, she said.

Avery urged the white women in the audience to be more inclusive of other women in the women's movement.

"White women need to cross class and race barriers in their continued efforts to create equality for women," she said.

Avery said she realized there was a need for improved black women's health services after she began working at a community college in which black women students had more health problems than white women. At the same time she said she discovered a survey in which half of black women aged 18-25 rated themselves as living in "psychological distress."

As a result, in 1981 she formed the first National Congress on Black Women's Health Issues, a conference where black women came together to discuss problems specific to them.

Avery said that until 1981, which is when the National Black Women's Health Project was founded, health information was not accessible to black women.

The National Black Women's Health Project is committed to defining, promoting and maintaining the physical, mental and emotional well being of black women, said Avery.

Denise Spellberg, a visiting lecturer and research associate in Women's Studies and the History of Religion at the Harvard Divinity School gave a lecture last night at Smith College about the changing images of women in Islamic religion.

In her lecture entitled "Image and History: Female Religious Figures in Medieval Islam," Spellberg described three main female figures in Islamic Religious imagery: Khadija, the first wife of the prophet Mohammed; Fatima, her daughter; and Aisha, the second and favorite wife of the prophet.

Khadija is crucial in confirming the visions that Mohammed received of the angel Gabriel. She is often referred to as the first convert.

The birth of her daughter Fatima is an event blessed by heaven, Spellberg said. Fatima embodies the image of woman as both virgin and mother.

The prophets' second wife Aisha is revered by the Sunnis as his most important and favorite wife. Heavenly intervention miraculously steps in when she is accuased of adultery, and she is exonerated when Mohammed gets a vision telling of her innocence. She is the focus of feminine sexuality in a context of accusation and shame. Her image is not portrayed in the context of this accusation and the Shiite text refers to her as an adulterer and worse while the Sunnis esteem her place.

After the prophet's death she challenges Ali for political power and is defeated. Spellberg states 'she is a cipher of the danger of the role of women in politics.'

Despite their places in legend, the image of Fatima has become the dominant representation. The images of these women were transformed in the Medieval period. The image of Khadija remained the same. Fatima took on a role analogous to that of the virgin Mary in Christian doctrine.

A parallel structure to Christian images emerged with Fatima revered as the virgin and mother of the martyr Hussein who was analogous to Jesus. Aisha became a background figure — at best a warning of the danger of women in politics. Fatima, as a mother image, symbolized passivity. As religious symbols, the women served as parameters for what behavior was acceptable for females.

"We've seen to it that all the flyers have been taken down, it is definitely an anti-gay symbol," she said.

She said the Student Activities Office will not be taking any actions against the organization or the members who put up the flyers.

The Young Americans for Freedom re-registered with the Student Activities Office three weeks ago after losing their membership due to inactivity, Jean said.

The SAO will have people present at the rally, she said, to ensure that the rally is a 'Straight Pride' rally and not a homophobic rally.

A memo issued today by Scott Garstka, chairperson of the Young Americans for Freedom said the point of Tuesday's rally is to show "the positive aspects of heterosexuality and not the criticism of alternative lifestyles." In the memo Gartska said "Comparisons without malice will be acceptable topic, but name calling and finger pointing will not be tolerated. The main objective of the rally is to have a respectable conservative rally."

Benjaman Eder, a member of the LBGA, said the group will file formal complaints against the flyers as a homophobic action with the Dean of Students.

LBGA member Tracy Sliwa said she found the flyer 'very offensive.'

"It offends me because I'm gay and sodomy has nothing to do with my lifestyle, not that there's anything wrong with it, but there is more to homosexuality," she said.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted

Earth Week is a start

Put away the aerosol cans and cigarettes and keep the car in the garage this week. It's Earth Week, and it is time to give the ozone layer a break.

However, like so many causes and celebrations at the University of Massachusetts, it is too easy to relegate the importance of this planet's viability to one block of time.

A massive show of support this week will not do the job. This is reality: the ozone layer is depleting, our oceans and rivers are scarred by pollutants, their banks tracked with shards of glass, abandoned cars and rusted barrels.

Animals are dying; birds frolic amid tires on riverbanks; fish are seared by chemical pollutants and numerous oil spills.

And people are suffering. The smog in Los Angeles is like a layer of fog. Here in Amherst, near the mountains, the air is clearer. But every day the exhaust from cars pollutes the air, unrecyclable plastic wrappers are thrown away, and newspapers remain unrecycled (which is illegal here).

This is only the tip of the iceberg. If you drive, try to cut down and take the bus more often. If you smoke, try to quit and you'll make everyone happy. If you are reading this newspaper, do not throw it away: recycle.

Use this week as a place to start. It will be a monumental waste if this 'day' sparks no further action because the steps we can take to help save our planet are simple.

It is time to stop being defensive about our lifestyles and hiding behind excuses that we didn't cause this problem.

It is time to start being part of the solution.

Israel is not anti-Arab

Anti-Israel propaganda has been on the rise.

As a student of University of Massachusetts, I see an unbalanced picture of the situation in the Arab-Israeli conflict. As a citizen of Israel, I must present the other side of the story that is never heard.

Tamir Marder

After Israel was recognized as a Jewish state by the United Nations in 1948, the Arab countries surrounding the new state began a war whose purpose was to destroy Israel. In this war, many Arabs left Israel and became refugees.

At the same time, Jews were forced to leave Arab countries and become refugees as well. Israel immediately helped these Jewish refugees and gave them full citizenship.

But the Arab nations, unlike Israel, kept the refugees now known as Palestinians, in the poverty of refugee camps. Most of these camps were in the area known as the West Bank.

Jerusalem and the West Bank were conquered by Jordan in this war against Israel. The Jewish people living there were treated brutally, and their homes were destroyed. Though they were civilians, they became prisoners of war. In 1950 Jordan annexed the West Bank, but kept the Arab refugees in camps.

In 1967 Israel won the West Bank after fighting a defensive war against seven Arab nations. Besides East Jerusalem, Israel did not annex the West Bank, hoping to negotiate with it for peace. The Arabs who live in the West Bank are still Jordanian citizens. But despite that, they are actually a defeated enemy.

Israel helped these people with jobs, health care, etc. Instead of helping the Arabs in the refugee camps, the Arab nations support terrorist organizations, like the PLO, whose goal is to build a Palestinian state on the ruins of Israel.

Lately, the world community has put pressure on Israel to negotiate with the PLO and create a Palestinian state from the West Bank.

But there is already a Palestinian state — 70 percent of the people of Jordan are Palestinian. The PLO is still a terrorist organization whose constitution calls for the destruction of Israel.

Four days after Yassir Arafat, the PLO leader, supposedly recognized Israel and renounced terrorism, his deputy in Kuwait said that gaining the West Bank will be the first stage in building a Palestinian state on the ruins of Israel.

Only several weeks later Yassir Arafat himself threatened that, "Whoever thinks of stopping the "Intifada" (the uprising) before it achieves its goals, I will give him 10 bullets in his chest. (Jan. 1, 1989), in Riyadh)" Naturally, Israel is reluctant to deal with the PLO.

Another important issue to address is the recent comparison of Israel to South Africa. It is an outrage that someone could say that Israel is an Apartheid state and that Zionism is racism. Israel is not an anti-Arab state. The Arabs who live in Israel are full citizens, vote in national elections, and there are Arabs in Israel's Parliament.

Israel is not a racist state. Over 15,000 black Ethiopians escaped to Israel and were given full citizenship. Israel was the first country in the world to accept the boat people from Southeast Asia.

Zionism means that the Jewish people will always have a homeland, Israel. At the same time, the rights of minorities will be preserved.

Israel is willing to forfeit land for real peace. The territory of Sinai, an area twice the size of Israel, was given to Egypt for peace. Unfortunately, the situation of the West Bank is not simply one of land.

It is a complicated issue that cannot be resolved by dealing with terrorists. Only negotiation and compromise with a legitimate leadership that truly wants peace will succeed.

" GO FOR IT ! "

Masking the facts in column

As a result of the recent election for the new officers on the Board of Governors, I was elected as Treasurer. A column printed in Tuesday's Collegian ("Political agendas hit BOG," Gayle Long) made some invalid accusations.

The election held on Thursday, April 12 was legally conducted according to the BOG Constitution. To win the election, the nominees needed a majority.

Correct me if I'm wrong, but 11 to 10 is a majority, no matter how small of a margin. If you don't believe the election results, then you are questioning the governors who cast their votes.

The columnist quoted the BOG Constitution, which states the mission of the Board. "The Board is to represent the students in a proper balance." Does that mean just liberals? Where do the conservatives fit into this picture?

Is the columnist a professional journalist? Professional journalists know their facts. To say that "The conservatives asked her [Noone] to run" is inaccurate statement.

I ran for the position because I felt, and I still believe, that I can do the job. I was never asked by other conservatives. I am the only master of my fate.

President George Bush once said, "Think big, adhere to the highest ethical standards, be on record as much as possible, be frank, fight hard for your position. When a leader makes a call, move together as a team. Work with the administration and represent your constituency with dignity." This is something I intend to live by.

"The campus will suffer from lack of accomplishment and the BOG will become a financial fiasco because of Mary Noone being treasurer." It is presumptuous to make this statement in advance.

There are a majority of people who have confidence in me and my ability. That is where I will get my power to accomplish the necessary tasks.

It is an injustice, and insulting to females, to use the woman/man issue to mask the fact that the election did not turn out the same way some people would have liked.

To make a judgment on my future accomplishments before I begin, and stating that I am just a puppet of other conservative men on the BOG, denotes strong sexual discrimination.

Women will not succeed unless other women stop becoming the opposition. As they say, "Women are their own worst enemy." Is that what the women of the University of Massachusetts represent?

Mary Noone
Board of Governors

The aftermath of suicide

Recently, the suicide of Richard Koster shocked the UMass campus. Koster is actually one of three UMass students who have committed suicide this year.

Deborah Slosberg also hung herself at age 31 in her off-campus residence. A doctoral student, Chrisitan Bromecker, injected himself with lethal poison in Morrill Science Center last December.

Kendra Pratt

Suicide is one of the top three causes of death for young adults along with vehicle accidents and AIDS. Despite support groups and the 10 free visits to a Mental Health Services counselor offered through the Basic Health Plan, college students still choose suicide as the answer to their depression and stress management problems. It may be that mental therapy still carries the stigma that, if you go to someone else for help through the daily ordeals of life, then you must be crazy.

Here is an idea that could drive you crazy. Imagine going to your own funeral after you kill yourself. (This is simply a mental exercise, not an effort to document an out-of-body experience.) Of course, in order for this exercise to be effective, you must imagine that you are invisible and inaudible. This is logical because you are dead.

First, listen to what the person conducting the funeral has to say about you. This is her or his interpretation of what your friends and family think of you. If you object to something that is said about you, remember that you are dead and can't object. This person will talk about how much you were hurting inside without probably having ever met you. The eulogy will also discuss how much potential you had and try to express the hurt and anger that everyone at the funeral feels toward you.

Look over the mourners and see who came to your funeral. Your family will be standing together for support. Your friends will be looking at their shoes or crying. You want to re-explain what you went through to your parents, but you realize that they can't hear you. You have never seen your father look so upset.

After the ceremony, you ride in your roommate's car to the reception at your parent's house. Your friends say that they feel it was their fault because they didn't notice the warning signs. Your roommate wonders how someone who seemed to be having such a good time Saturday night could commit suicide the next day. Your lover hasn't stopped crying since the beginning of the funeral.

You really want to tell everyone that you had been having suicidal thoughts since high school but couldn't face them. It amazes you to see how much your friends cared about you. You don't want anyone to feel this badly on account of you.

How can they think that it's their fault? This seems ridiculous to you because the bad feelings you were having were so personal and intense that you were afraid to tell anyone. Now what do you do?

Nothing, because you already are dead and no one can help you.

Play disturbs brilliantly

By JOSH GALITSKY
Collegian Staff

Aunt Dan and Lemon
Curtain Theater
Wednesday April 18

Where do I begin?

Perhaps whether or not I enjoyed this play is irrelevant because Aunt Dan and Lemon is not a play. It is an immersion into a stream of consciousness which jabs and swings at its audience like a prizefighter looking to drain its opponent. The work is an oddity of chaos and control which strangely fascinates the viewer not unlike watching a raging fire envelop a building.

The only fault of the work is that it cries out for an intermission or at least I was crying for one. It seems that the lack of intermission had to do with making the audience psychologically unsettled by creating physical discomfort. Point taken.

The lifeblood of Aunt Dan and Lemon came in its acting performances. Each actor was crisp and controlled. Kimberly Maloney was confident and consistent as the likable, eccentric Aunt Dan. Although Maloney could have reached further into the complexity of the character, she was powerfully convincing during her angry tirade defending Henry Kissinger.

Kate Rosen was subtle and stunning. She played 3 different characters and was extremely captivating as Lemon's mother. Jeff Johnson was hilarious with his perfect timing and delivery. He was easily the most relaxed person in the room including the audience.

There were other solid performances. Teresa O'Brien was cunning and clever as the provocative Mindy. Ed Patriquin was humorous in his three different roles. Also, Tom Scully added a comedic brand of caricature in his role as Raimondo, the strange Spanish love machine.

But the night belonged to Kari Percival as Lemon. Her performance was compelling and ultimately frightening. Percival improved as the play went on, from her innocent and later romantic fascination with Aunt Dan to her self-created fantasies to her terrifying final speech about the human necessity to murder. Her facial expressions and delivery were both charming and powerful.

Joshua Perlstein did a fine job directing a very difficult show. Although some of the characters could have been explored further, Perlstein kept the action well-paced and the transitions between fantasy and reality quick and controlled. He also took some risks with the way he played his actors to the crowd, some of the action practically taking place in our laps.

Overall Aunt Dan and Lemon was a difficult play to watch but an even more difficult play to turn away from. The murder scene of Raimondo summed up the play's effect on me. It was a horribly uncomfortable thing to watch but I watched it with odd almost disturbing fascination.

Pankow and Consolidated offer music to be bored by

By JON DRUKMAN
Collegian Correspondent

Well, the Public Enemy album finally came out and turned out to be even better than anticipated, but since it has already been extensively covered in these pages, let's see what else is in my box today. Hmmm, a pretty sad lot to be sure. . .

From Germany comes the dulcet sounds of Pankow, another one of those imported industrial groups on Wax Trax! Records. They've got a bunch of singles out, but today we're going to talk about their full-length album, Gisela. Basically, it sounds like KMFDM meets Nitzer Ebb. Considering that a few of the tracks were mixed by the omnipresent Adrian Sherwood, the KMFDM comparison is no surprise. Unfortunately, this group has very little to say. They have a pretty interesting cover of "Warm Leatherette" (bringing the number of covers of this song up to eight hundred). There's a stomping good tune called "Let Me Be Stalin" which sounds vaguely like Laibach, but overall there's just not much to recommend here. I'm not wild about the droning pieces with German lyrics spoken over them because I don't speak German, and the upbeat stuff has been done better by others like KMFDM, or Laibach, or Madonna. . .Whoa! Just kidding.

Moving quickly back to America, we turn to the San Francisco Bay Area and find the debut EP by the group Consolidated, essentially four guys with a lot of drum machines. Their big hit song is called "Consolidated" — something which I find rather irksome because when you have a band, album and single all sharing the same name, it tends to betray a certain poverty of imagination. The only good thing about it is that it allows feisty music critics like myself to use the otherwise pointless word "eponymous" in a review, thus alienating the general public who probably think that anybody who uses the word "eponymous" in casual conversation is a real wanker.

Vocabulary digressions aside, this eponymous single has been doing well in the clubs lately featuring lots of strange sounds and samples. The lyrics are a bit pretentious, but just turn it up loud enough and you won't care. The rest of the tracks on the EP are a notch below the single in terms of energy, inventiveness and fun, but "Mishima" is a fairly close second. I suppose if you are cursed like me with an appetite for records that go boom, then you must get this one as well. Otherwise if you hang around the right clubs long enough you'll hear plenty of it.

Well that about wraps up this pitiful selection. If I can force the Public Enemy disc out of my stereo long enough maybe I'll find something better for next week. A bientot. . .

Arts' screw-ups

As usual, arts screwed-up yesterday.

The International Fair will be held in the UMass Campus Center Auditorium on Saturday only.

The Phirst Church of Phun (the story that had the award winning headline, "Phunky phresh phun phor rainphorest"), will be held in the Hampshire College Dining Commons.

Also as usual, the Collegian regrets these errors, but that won't prevent us from continuing to screw-up.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): This is a day when you should listen, not act. Welcome suggestions. A delicate personal matter requires sensitive handling. Help a young person y letting him make his own mistakes.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Be more selective when choosing your companions. Others respond readily to your emotional needs however, avoid being overly demanding. if your partner displays signs of stubbornness, back away.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your skill at predicting trends lets you stay ahead of the pack. Work on a project begun last week. Involvement with a community or charity campaign could help your career aims. Enlist allies.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): It is mind over matter if you want to succeed today. Marriage brings a great change in the way some people think. Friends in high places will come through for you. Romance soars!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A great day to investigate a new job opportunity. You reaffirm an old love. It will not be as difficult to communicate your thoughts as you supposed. Lost objects will be found.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Happily, you have a cure for what ails loved one. Be sensitive to your own needs as well. A new scheme may not be as wild as it sounds. Avoid an office romance.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Realize that it is impossible to please everyone and follow your own conscience. Bring a romance to an end if you are spending too much time doing battle. Better times lie ahead.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Investigate stock tips proposed by friends. Sensitive family matters will require careful handling. A teenager makes a special request; do everything you can to help this young person.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21): New business alliances are forged. Try to remain calm when a company makes a surprising announcement. Big gains are possible. Socialize with those who have power and wealth.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Creative endeavors can bring big bucks today. Move cautiously to avoid misunderstandings. A job offer could sound better than it really is. Romance enjoys favorable influences. Someone sets the date!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Stay away from co-workers who tend to upset you. A strong alliance in busines or romance could turn this into a red-letter day. Travel gives you a better perspective on a personal problem.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Once again, longtime friends impress you with their loyalty. Grant them meaningful favors in the near future. Postpone signing contracts and other legal papers. Certain information is still missing.

and Comeau each chipped in with three apiece.

The Minutemen now journey to Rutgers for four games over the weekend. Both teams are 7-1 in the A-10, good for a share of first place.

"They [Rutgers] are a lot like us, they steal bases, have good pitching and good hitting," Stone said. "We'll see what kind of a team we are, whether we're a tournament team or not. We'll take it one game at a time."

Last year, Rutgers took 3-of-4 from the Minutemen at Lorden Field.

Murphy, who scored three goals in the game, said. "I'm going to miss it."

It was a game that epitomized what UMass lacrosse has been all about over the last 15 years. Never say die. Never quit. That is why the Gazelles have only had losing seasons in two of those 15. That is why the Gazelles were the last team on this campus to win a national championship (1982).

It was that same kind of mentality that enabled the Gazelles to beat a team that UMass coach Patti Bossio wasn't sure they could overcome.

UMass never trailed in the game. Senior attacker Ann King opened up the scoring with 19:27 left in the first half. It was the first of two goals for King.

The Catamounts kept coming back and coming back though. Vermont countered for every goal that UMass scored until the count was 5-5. That is when Murphy took over.

Her first goal came as she was the beneficiary of a pretty backhand pass by freshman midfielder Rachael Splaine. Splaine had streaked down the right side of the field and sent the pass to Murphy inches in front of the Vermont net where she tucked it home with 17:49 left in the game to give UMass a 6-5 lead.

The next time, Murphy did it all by herself, spinning around the left side of the net, minded by goalie Megan James (10 saves), and finishing off the hat trick to give UMass a 7-5 lead with 10:30 left in the contest.

The Catamounts cut the lead to 7-6 with 7:01 left. But UMass goalie Karen Pierce (20 saves) shut Vermont down the rest of the way with a couple of tough stops to ice the win for UMass.

Veterans Murphy, King and Liz Hoye (scoring her first goal of the year) led the Minutewomen. But it was the play of some inexperienced players that really was the deciding factor.

"People that don't normally play, played today and they played their hearts out," UMass coach Patti Bossio said. "That was the difference."

The Gazelles will need a similar effort when they face off at Rutgers tomorrow (1 p.m.) and Temple on Sunday (1 p.m.).

women's tennis team will be sponsoring a May Day Tennis Tournament on April 27-29 at the Upper Boyden Courts.

The tournament will help raise funds to keep the Minutewomen in scrimmage competition next spring.

"Hartford said they'd scrimmage us next year," Gentzler said. "We don't need a whole lot of money to maintain a scrimmage schedule. But we do need some funds for gas and meal money, and to pay for indoor court time."

The tournament will be split into two divisions of competition for both men's and women's singles and doubles, as well as mixed competition. Singles will begin Friday, April 27 at 5 p.m. and doubles will begin Saturday, April 28 at 10 a.m.

Students may enter at a table on the Campus Center Concourse on Monday and Tuesday, or at the tennis and volleyball office in Boyden Gym. Entry fees are $12 for singles and $20 for a doubles team, and the deadline for registration is Wednesday, April 25.

The seedings draw will be posted at the Athletic Dept. and on the Boyden Courts on Thursday, April 26 at 5 p.m. Entrants are responsible for finding out their own starting times.

For more information, stop by the tennis office or contact Gentzler at 545-1950.

ting .317 with seven doubles, a triple and one homer for a .431 slugging percentage.

Maine will send Sherri Bridges (4-18) to the mound. Despite her record, Bridges sports a 2.60 ERA. That's mainly due to the fact that of the 103 runs that she has allowed, only 55 have been earned. Ouch.

Defense appears to be the thorn in the Black Bears' paw. Maine enters today's contest sporting a .896 fielding percentage, allowing slightly more than one free pass in every 10 chances.

However, the games against Maine only start the weekend for UMass as they play A-10 rivals St. Joseph's on Saturday (1 p.m.), and Temple on Sunday (1 p.m.). These two teams split a doubleheader on Tuesday.

The Hawks will take Totman Field with a 10-21 record, 4-6 in the A-10, and are led offensively by Pam Polacek. Polacek leads all St. Joseph's batters with a .289 average.

Sunday's game against Temple will be a good opportunity for the Minutewomen to gain some ground in the A-10. The Lady Owls (14-11) are currently second in the A-10.

UMass is currently fourth in the league and if things go well this weekend, the Minutewomen could jockey themselves into better A-10 standings.

Be there and be loud.

Baseball puts forth powerful outing, 21-6

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts baseball team pounded out 20 hits, including seven homeruns, as they walloped Springfield College 21-6 yesterday at Lorden Field.

"I hope we save some hits for the weekend," said UMass coach Mike Stone. "It was a great day to hit, a warm day with the wind blowing out."

Steve Corradi led the hit parade with a pair of blasts, his third and fourth dingers of the season. UMass trailed 2-0 after Springfield scored twice in the first on a Gavin Sheridan homer. Corradi tied the game with his first homer which scored Mike Tobin (walk). Derek Dana proceeded to put the Minutemen up for good as he banged a three-run homer deep over the center field fence. Dana's homer plated Ian Torres and Drew Comeau to make the score 5-2.

Corradi upped the lead to four when he hit his second homer of the game in the second inning to give UMass a 6-2 lead. The Chiefs added a single run in the third courtesy of a Sam Gillen smash.

UMass answered with three runs in the fourth when Brian Bright belted his team-leading sixth homer of the season. Bright, who continues to play with a sore knee, snapped a long streak of homerless games. Bright's homer was made possible by the wind which caused several fly balls to be mishandled. Although the teams combined for just two errors, there were a few balls which should have been caught but were not because of the gusty wind.

While the Minutemen were smacking hits left and right, pitcher Rob Graziano was holding Springfield in check. Graziano pitched six innings to record his first win of the season. Graziano struck out three and allowed six hits in what is certainly his best outing of the season.

In the sixth inning, Ian Torres hit his second round tripper of the year, a three-run homer. Lou Olivieri added his second homer, a two-run job, that put UMass ahead 15-3.

Things only got worse for the Chiefs. Tom Murray completed the homer fest with a 400-foot rope which scored three more Minutemen. The Minutemen scored a total of five runs in the eighth, three from the Murray hit, another from an Olivieri single, and one more from Kevin Correa that capped off a 20-hit, 21-run day.

For the Chiefs, allowing 10 or more runs has become an all to familiar sight. The Springfield pitching staff has allowed 20 or more runs three times and 10 or more five times. The Chiefs' team ERA is now close to eight, and after watching this game, it would appear that their ERA may stay around eight.

One note of interest, Drew Comeau tied a school record for doubles in a single season in the sixth when he doubled to left for his 15th two bagger of the year. Comeau was 3-for-4 on the day and is now batting .416.

Ten different UMass batters had hits, Corradi led the way with four, and Dana

Women's lacrosse edges Vermont, 7-6

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

It was only fitting that the University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team ended the home half of its 1990 schedule the way it did yesterday.

The Gazelles squeaked by the University of Vermont, 7-6 at Totman Field yesterday in what may have been the last varsity women's lacrosse game ever played at UMass. The program has been suspended indefinitely because of budget cuts at UMass.

"It's going to be wierd knowing that the only team on that field next year is going to be field hockey," senior attacker Sue

Gorillas set for Army invasion

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

Don't look now, but the military is coming back to campus.

But this is not CIA recruitment or Department of Defense research. No, to some people this is more serious stuff.

The men's lacrosse team from the United States Military Academy will march into Boyden Field tomorrow at 1 p.m. to take on the University of Massachusetts. Traditonally, the battle between UMass and Army is always a big one.

"We're hoping to get a lot of people out here," said UMass coach Dick Garber. Maybe not quite like the mob that flooded The Hill and its immediate surroundings four years ago, but a heated crowd always helps.

Army is usually a power, but has been a bit on the down side the past couple of years. UMass won the meetings last year and in 1988, but neither was easy.

This year's may be no different. Although the Cadets are just 4-6, they've had some interesting results. Wednesday, Army fell to No. 2 Yale, 16-10 (Jon Reese scored 10 against them, if that makes anybody feel any better), the same margin of the Gorillas' loss last weekend. Both have also lost to Cornell (UMass 16-15, Army 14-8).

The Cadets haven't had any serious wins, save for a 15-13 job over Hofstra. Other wins came over Gettysburg, Lehigh and Bucknell.

As usual, the two teams met during the fall season, and Garber said that Army is no different this year than any other team to come out of West Point.

"They were really aggressive, tough players," Garber said. "Their defenders were slow, but they're attackmen were better than they've ever had."

Five players are in double figures in goals, led by freshman attack Steve Heller (24-10-34). Junior midfielder Rob Cahill and freshman attack Phil Mandry each had 16 goals.

In net, freshman Paul Jackson has gotten the most action in place of the graduated Rob Salter. Jackson has yielded nearly 10 goals per game with a save percentage of .564.

Women's tennis falls to Hartford

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's tennis team dropped a tough 5-4 match to the University of Hartford yesterday at the Upper Boyden Courts.

The Minutewomen were even at three matches apiece entering the doubles play, but were able to grab only one of three doubles matches from the Hawks.

"We beat them in the fall and they beat us in the spring," UMass coach Edwin Gentzler said of the series with Hartford. "We're evenly matched with some of the better schools in New England."

Hartford had the best of the top three spots in singles, as Gail Girasella (6-4, 6-1), Kere Eddy (5-7, 6-2, 6-1) and Shizuko Yamasaki (6-1, 6-4) each dropped their matches.

But Amy Ryan (6-4, 6-4) beat Lara Correll, Kerri Kaminski (6-2, default) stopped Megan Brennan, and Allsion Agnew (6-4, 6-2) defeated Donna Geneen, to rally their team with wins at the fourth, fifth and sixth seeds.

In doubles, Agnew and Kelly Grim took a 6-3, 6-4 straight set win at No. 3 over Brennan and Geneen, but Girasella/Eddy (6-2, 6-2) and Yamasaki/Ryan (6-1, 6-3) were each on the short end of their matches.

"Our doubles combinations are much improved, and the competition is better in the singles from 1-6," Gentzler said. "I've got all freshmen and sophomores out there. The prospects for next year are very good. The kids have a good attitude."

UMass, which also dropped a tough 5-4 match at the University of Connecticut earlier this season, has a home match Monday against Central Connecticut.

Spring, summer and fall are all very nice seasons in New England, but watch out for those other seven months.

The University of Massachusetts softball team knows all about New England weather.

"This is the worst spring I've ever seen," said coach Elaine Sortino during Wednesday's practice.

You might remember Wednesday — April 18. It snowed.

Worst of all is that this rotten spring weather is having an effect on the Minutewomen's season. Last Tuesday UMass, which had already seen a doubleheader against Rhode Island rained out April 3, had yet another postponed.

"We should be done with that series now and we haven't even started," said catcher Cherie DellAnno.

"Our major opponent has been the weather," shivered Sortino. "You can plan for UConn, but you can't deal with snow."

The home games for UMass against the WRams have been rescheduled for April 25.

Today (weather permitting) the Minutewomen will face Maine (6-30) for a doubleheader at Totman, 3 p.m.

The Black Bears bring their record, which looks more like a date for a nice June wedding, to Totman to play UMass.

Due to both the weather and the Easter holiday, the Minutewomen have still not played since their dramatic come-from-behind win over heavily ranked UConn. The question that faces UMass is whether the long layoff will take away some of the momentum created in the victory over the Huskies.

Sortino takes a philosophical view of the situation. "If we have lost something emotionally or psychologically due to the weather, we've come together as a team."

Maine should prove to be a good team for the Minutewomen to get their feet back into the water against.

The Black Bears' major offensive power comes in the persons of Jocelyn Kondrotas, who leads Maine with a .326 batting average, and Kimberly Reed, who is bat-

Amherst celebrates Earth Day

Events on Common attended by 1500

By DARREN GARNICK
Collegian Staff

Environmentalists invaded Amherst Common yesterday, urging the community to make everyday "Earth Day" by doing its share to save our planet from impending ecological doom.

Hundreds of people swarmed the Common throughout the day, browsing over information tables and ecology t-shirts, signing petitions and tossing the occasional frisbee. According to Dan Jacobson, one of the organizers of Amherst Earth Day, at least 1500 participants turned out for the event.

"It's a good thing we had good connections with the Earth Day guy upstairs," Dan said, referring to the day's sunny 75 degree weather.

Participants were encouraged to pin green ribbons to their clothing. Alison Whitlock, another organizer of yesterday's festivities, said the ribbons were meant to "celebrate unity with the planet and each other."

Kevin Eastman, co-creator of the Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtle cartoon characters, set up a table selling autographed comic books. The proceeds will help fund next year's Amherst Earth Day celebration, he said.

Environmental woes subject of Olympiad

By JOSEPH M. MONTAGNA
Collegian Correspondent

The Earth Day celebration came to Amherst College Sunday afternoon, as an environmental obstacle course was held in collaboration with the other events taking place on Amherst Common for Earth Day 1990.

The "Earth Day Olympiad" was organized by the MassPIRG chapter of Amherst College and was "designed to give people a sense of what they can do to protect the environment," said Chris Hauschildt, a MassPIRG member and a sophomore at Amherst.

About 20 students raced around the various stations of the course, each of which was tied into different environmental issues.

At the station called "Prince William Sound," participants crab-walked around a course while supporting a replica of the Exxon Valdez on their stomachs. Another station, dealing with rainforest destruction, consisted of transferring newspapers to different places on the course.

Other obstacles students struggled with were the sack race and crossing a pool of contaminated water while drinking clean water. At the end of the course participants signed pledge cards showing their support of Earth Day.

While prizes such as t-shirts and gift certificates were given out to those with the best times, the purpose of Earth Day to educate and increase awareness of the environment through celebration was not lost.

"The purpose is to have fun in an environmental way," said Jennifer Eden, an Amherst student and a member of MASSPIRG.

Jeremy Rosenholtz, also an Amherst student and MassPIRG member, said, "It's more of a celebration than anything else."

However, according to Andy Schwartz, who was in charge of the event, the events of Earth Day, including the obstacle course, were "a lot of fun" while making us environmentally aware.

Note may identify Galligan murderer

By SARAH DEMASTER
Collegian Staff
and The Associated Press

State police probing the death of Sharon Galligan hope to hear from the author of an anonymous note purporting to name the killer.

The note, postmarked Springfield, sent two weeks ago to Hadley police was handwritten on plain paper and contained one sentence: "Sharon Galligan was killed by. . ." state police told the Boston Sunday Herald.

The name was not disclosed because the investigation is ongoing.

According to The Hampshire Gazette, a man with a name similar to that supplied by the anonymous writer — a name that did not appear on the investigators' previous list of potential subjects — has been located, but police will not question him until they are sure he is the person referred to in the letter.

Although investigators have not disclosed whether they believe the man named in the letter had any known connection to Galligan, State Police Lt. Edward Harrington said in an interview last week, "I personally still feel [the killer] was a stranger, because not a lot of people knew where she was going [on Dec. 18]. I don't feel that a person that knew her could have done this."

Although 14 police officers were initially assigned to the case, Harrington said that three officers continue to look into the slaying on a daily basis.

He added that while calls to Northwest District Attorney Judd Carhart's office average two or three per day, as compared to about 20 calls per day at the beginning of the investigation, the office has received an increase in calls from the University of Massachusetts.

However, the information supplied by callers has not helped investigators focus in on an individual subject, he said. State police have a file of approximately 100 possible subjects, he said.

Harrington said investigators will not know the importance of information from the criminal laboratory in Boston about Galligan's clothes and car, and clothing from possible subjects, until they can focus on one person. He did not disclose the nature of the information the laboratory has supplied.

GEO to administration: grant union or else

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
Collegian Staff

Unless a last minute agreement is reached with the University of Massachusetts administration, the Graduate Employee Organization plans to block all the entrances to the Whitmore Administration Building on Tuesday in a civil disobedience effort to press for a "fair and fast" election for union status.

Renee Heberle, a coordinating committee member and spokeswoman for the GEO, said like many of the other actions held against the administration, its ultimate goal is a union to represent graduate students on campus in collective bargaining with the administration.

"We hope this will bring new attention to our cause, possibly national media attention and force the administration's hand," Heberle said.

Mark Kenen, a coordinating committee member, said he hopes to meet with President/Chancellor Duffey today and avert the action but said it is not likely since no session is planned and Duffey is said to be out of town.

According to the GEO literature, the blockade, which they plan to begin at 7 a.m., will consist of "non-violently blocking all three entrances to Whitmore by sitting or lying in front of the doors, until they agree to a 'fair and fast' election or arrest us."

Yesterday, about 60 graduate students gathered in the Cape Cod Lounge to learn about their role in the civil disobedience action and what to do in the event police begin to arrest.

The training was led by Public Health research assistant Laura Gibbons, who is a trained non-violence trainer, and Aja Riggs, who is also a non-violence trainer.

"I think people are ready to take on this kind of action," Gibbons said. "Compared to other groups I have trained, they are very experienced and committed. There is very little anxiety in this group."

The leadership of the GEO expects other campus union members and graduate student sympathizers to participate in the action.

■ Earth Day

Along with several of his comic book writers, Eastman handed out Ninja Turtle pamphlets on recycling and water pollution.

"A lot of the recent books raise environmental awareness," he said. "Upcoming adventures have the Turtles in a rainforest, and one time-travel issue has them exploring the world before factories and cities, before pollution."

About 20 members of the Friends of the Holyoke Mountain Range began their day marching six miles from the Notch Visitors Center on Route 116 to the Common, carrying pro-environment banners and signs.

John Higgins, state regional director of the Department of Environmental Protection in Springfield, said the march was well-received by motorists.

"Lots of people were honking and shouting out their support," he said. "Only one person gave us the finger."

Organizers made sure plenty of Earth Day activities appealed to children. University of Massachusetts graduate student Julie Maloney set up a mural painting booth, encouraging children to add pictures and comments.

Pictures of flowers and trees and slogans such as "Please Save the Earth" and "Peace and Love," dominated the murals.

Maloney, who is studying "creativity" in the UMass education department, said the murals are a effective way to instill environmentalism in children at an early age.

"Whenever you do anything active or creative, something that comes out of you, you remember it," she said.

"[Environmentalists] used to be considered leftist or kooky," Maloney said. "But after 20 years of activism, people are now more open. The consciousness has shifted."

Betsy Flack, a UMass junior anthropology major, brought her sisters Hanna, age 3, and Sophie, age 6, to paint the mural.

"It's her first peace symbol," Flack said smiling, looking over Hanna's work of art.

Buses display murals to promote racial diversity

By LISA MILLEGAN
Collegian Staff

Despite extensive coverage by the local media, several University of Massachusetts students gave blank stares when asked their opinion of new murals on several Pioneer Valley Regional Transit Authority buses.

Each mural, which takes the place of regular advertisements this month, consists of three blown-up photographs of either mouths, noses or eyes of people of various races. The slogan "I AM YOU" is imprinted under the entire mural.

Designer Rebecca Graves, a UMass graduate student said she intended the murals to encourage students and community members to appreciate the richness and beauty of racial diversity.

"I have shown my art in galleries but I decided I wanted to try showing some art in a more public context which is why I thought of using the buses," she said. "I chose the subject [appreciation of racial diversity] because it is evident that at UMass there are racial tensions."

Once she came up with the idea for the bus art, Graves said she presented the proposal to the UMass Arts Council. The Council then approved her proposal and agreed to fund production costs, she said.

According to Marjorie Tuttle, spokeswoman for the Arts Council, the council was able to convince the PVTA to donate the billboard space on at least eight different buses.

Jennifer Geran, of the PVTA, said the organization decided to give up the advertising space for two months because the company thought it was a great cause. "We thought the civility theme was worthy of that space to promote it," she said.

People who had actually seen the murals had mixed feelings about the project.

"I like it," said senior Janice Crempa. "It makes you think about something [other than advertising]."

UMass graduate Susan Bordeaux said she thought "it was possible that the mural could have a positive effect on the UMass campus," but that she hadn't noticed the art until recently.

One student expressed confusion about what the mural was trying to say. Since the only mural he had seen was one featuring mouths, freshman Scott Snow said he thought the words "I AM YOU" corresponded to what each mouth was saying.

Graves, however, said she has gotten a lot of positive response from her colleagues in the art department. "People have said that it was not only good from a visual point of view but it expressed a good message," she said.

Panhellenic Council files complaint

Protests student's conduct at Mademoiselle fashion show

By AMY HENRY
Collegian Staff

Jeanne Bolduc, a spokeswoman for the Panhellinic Council of the University of Massachusetts filed a complaint through the Dean of Students as a result of UMass student Meaghan Burchell's conduct at a Mademoiselle fashion show a couple of weeks ago.

Burchell poured paint on two Mademoiselle magazines and disrupted the end of the Mademoiselle fashion show when she got up on stage to declare that the magazine objectified women.

Bolduc said she was happy with the Dean of Students decision on the complaint. She said Burchell would be required to pay for the property she destroyed, write a formal apology to the Council, and there would be another sanction against her that the Dean of Students would not divulge.

"In the future, people in general who are opposed to programs on campus should realize that destroying property and disrupting a event does not further their cause," said Bolduc.

Burchell said she would write a clarification of her actions not an apology. She also said she was charged with possession of a toxic substance, creating a fire hazard, disruption of a UMass event, disciplinary probation for a year, and a $60 payment for the table cloths that had paint poured on them.

Burchell said she had already made arrangements to pay for the table cloths before the decision on the complaint had been made.

"I recognize the effort they put into it and that my actions put a damper on it, but there was not a self-empowering message throughout the show or Mademoiselle magazine," said Burchell. "The messages that were given in the event and in Mademoiselle are destructive to women's self-esteem."

"The purpose of the advertisements in the magazine are to make women feel disgusted with their bodies," Burchell said. "Mademoiselle's advertisements promote competition between women instead of sisterhood."

Charmaine Wijeyesinghe, dean of students, said she would not comment on the complaint because these decisions are always made confidentially.

SAO rejects proposal to register Triathlon Club

By DAVID FORRESTER
Collegian Staff

Michael Stebe and Steven Schwankert are determined to participate in triathlons — with or without the the University of Massachusetts' recognition of their club.

The proposal to make the Triathlon Club a registered student organization was rejected by the Student Activities Office last week because SAO claimed the group was not active enough.

"I don't know what they expect us to do," said Schwankert, junior Chinese major and co-president of the club which has more than 10 members.

Schwankert said the SAO's claim that the group needs to be more active puts the club in a catch-22 situation.

He said in order to get more involvement the club needs to become established but, the SAO said to become established there needs to be more student participants.

"The cycling club rides every day at two o'clock," Schwankert said. "They're established enough that they can do that and people will arrange their schedules around it. We're just a fledgling organization."

Schwankert said the SAO will reconsider their petition for RSO status before the end of the semester.

Stebe, a sophomore political science and education major and co-president of the club, said the proposed club would create a place for athletes to pool resources, train with others, and discuss their sport.

Schwankert said the pooling of resources is an important part of the club. "It costs $50 an hour to reserve a swimming pool and we just don't have that kind of money," he said, adding that the swimming pools are crowded most of the time making it impossible to go as a group.

They said membership in the club would be open to students who take part in triathlons — combined swimming, running, and bicycling races.

Schwankert, a participant in nine triathlons, said he usually trains in all three of the separate events four times each week.

Stebe, a member of the cycling club, said he has never been in a triathlon. He said he bikes about 150 miles, runs 20 miles, and swims four miles each week.

Stebe said he is looking forward to participating in his first triathlon soon. "Asking why I would want to do a triathlon is like asking why you'd want to climb Mount Everest," he said. "I just want to see if I can do it."

Schwankert said until the group receives RSO status, the Triathlon Club will meet every Tuesday in 249 Boyden.

Flasher seen in Tower

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
Collegian Staff

A student reported on Thursday night that a man exposed himself on the 21st floor of the Tower Library. This is the second "flashing" incident on campus in a week.

In other police reports:

DISTURBANCES

- A disagreement over a loud stereo early Friday morning in Crampton resulted in a shoving match between two parties. A woman was treated at University Health Services for a scratch on her cheek.
- A vehicle travelling north on President Drive struck a van while attempting to park. The estimated value is $1100.

LARCENY

- Two rooms in the Goesmann Laboratory were entered on Thursday. A calculator and a briefcase were stolen. The estimated value is more than $150.

ARRESTS

- Bradford D. Swords, 17, of Longmeadow, was arrested Thursday on Pierpont Drive for being a minor transporting alcohol.
- A check of suspicious persons in Lot 22 on Friday resulted in the arrest of David D. Zaleski, 20, of Washington, for being a disorderly person.

Walden development sparks concern

CONCORD (AP) — Last month, 25 years after reading "Walden" in high school in East Texas, rock singer Don Henley finally visited this picturesque, sandy pond which inspired Henry David Thoreau more than a century ago.

The Walden Pond he saw, which lies less than a hundred yards from a state highway and is adjacent to a dump, is far less pastoral than when Thoreau lived by its shore in a tiny shack in 1845. "I've been an active environmentalist for over 20 years and part of that activism stems from reading his works," said Henley. "I just assumed Walden would be preserved forever."

Henley, a Grammy Award-winning singer-songwriter, was moved to visit Walden Pond and surrounding Walden Woods after he watched a television report on Cable News Network about the controversy over a proposed housing development in the area in January.

A group of local residents called the Thoreau Country Conservation Alliance is fighting efforts by developers to build a mixed-income condominium project half a mile from the pond. The group wants to make the 3,000-acre Walden Woods area a national landmark and believes that a condo project would mar the area.

Proponents of the project, which include state officials, say it will mean affordable housing for people who could not otherwise pay the high cost of homes in the area.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Flash those pearly whites

As much as I hate to admit it, I've been in a good mood lately. But I'm realistic. I know it's probably not going to last forever — probably.

Over the years I've tried to take different approaches to happiness. I've tried not to worry. I've tried to have a positive attitude. I've tried to pretend you can't rely on circumstances for happiness. I've tried to believe that happiness is a state of mind.

Bob Bobala

These techniques don't work. You can't think yourself into a good mood. If your life is a mess, your life is a mess. Go with the flow. Happiness is overrated anyway.

But if you're not willing to give up that easily, if you want to be jovial, filled with glee, there's one more thing you can try.

Through the past decade, and increasingly in the past year, some psychologists have begun to support a theory which holds that facial expressions are not only a result of emotions, but actually contribute to emotions themselves. In other words, by smiling you can make yourself feel happy.

The scientific reasoning behind this: when certain facial muscles are relaxed and tightened, the temperature of blood flowing to the brain is raised or lowered. For example, a smile tightens cheek muscles, decreasing the flow of blood to the cavernous sinus and cooling the blood that flows to the brain. Cool blood flow is associated with pleasant feelings.

So, there you go. Start smiling. It'll make your day better.

But in order for you to smile you need something to smile about.

Well, the people who took part in the experiments that tested this theory didn't have much to smile about either. German researchers had people imitate a smile by clenching a pen in between their teeth. Guess what. Happy feelings were induced.

In a similar study at the University of Michigan, volunteers were told to keep repeating the long "e" sound, which forces a smile, and the "ah" sound, which produces an expression of surprise. Both expressions led to pleasant emotions.

Now, imagine a roomful of these people — half of them with pens clenched between their teeth. That's enough to make me smile for real.

This whole theory got its roots from Charles Darwin, who published a paper on facial expressions and emotions in 1872. But I'd like to meet one of the guys who came up with the idea to have a bunch of people sit there making funny noises and chewing on pens. Maybe this is the type of stuff that goes on over in that corridor of Tobin Hall that's blocked off to all but "authorized personnel."

At any rate, all this may help out the "Smile America " project. Supposedly kicked off last year with the help of Pastor T.L. Bartlett J., the object of "Smile America" was to ". . . inspire, enlighten and provide the incentive for the development of an inevitable consciousness of the acknowledgment of mankind, through . . ." smiling. T-shirts, coffee mugs and bumper stickers were supposed to be distributed nationwide to remind people to smile. The idea was that if we smiled more, we'd be happier.

So put that pen in between your teeth and bite down hard. Keep making that long "e" sound when you're at dinner tonight. Happiness will be just around the corner.

White perpetrators of racism

To the students responsible for writing and posting the flyer: White Student accuses African American Student of theft of bike. . . just return and save another racial stereotype from becoming a reality.

Perpetrators of racism, I would like to address the illogic of your racial-hatred inciting posters.

Am I to assume that every white man is a member of a white supremist group like the Louisiana senator, David Duke? Or better yet, every time I see a white man, am I supposed to assume he is a white supremist plotting my demise? Think about it and self-reflect.

There are some who will read your poster and conclude that it is a joke. Others will shudder in disgust and turn their anger inward.

Perhaps they feel powerless to do anything about it. Or perhaps, and more likely, they will choose consciously not to address this particular insult.

After all, in a society that institutionalizes oppression and saturates its citizens with images that send messages of white rights (e.g. power) over the rights of people of color, there are many little and big injustices to fight.

I am writing to let you know that I've noticed your act of hatred and chosen not to ignore it.

You owe an apology to all the people of color on this campus and to your white brothers and sisters who have a sense of humanity and do not share your racist views.

Everything is up to you and me

"I could have prevented the killer from being born, his accomplice from going astray . . . Can you tell me at what precise moment I should have intervened to keep the children from being thrown into the flames? At the very last moment? Why not before? But when is 'before?'"

Elie Wiesel
Twilight, 1989

Alise Harfield

If we choose to remember the events of 1939-1945, many of us will unavoidably pose the question Mr. Wiesel here attempts to answer: Why a Holocaust?

How could a benevolent God be so well-believed despite allowing the brutal eradication of some six million of our world's inhabitants?

It is a great question, is it not? For if we were to find an answer, we could pin the whole travesty on God, and look no further.

After all, what did we expect of God anyway? When was he to divinely intervene, and how? By blockading the birth of Hitler? Stifling one of his powerful speeches to his followers? Crippling the limbs of those shooting the guns?

We must not forget that He is not human.

If we have the courage to recall what happened 50 years ago, we will see that the objects of our inquiries ought be directed only to those who could have prevented the Holocaust: us humans.

While the writer and Auschwitz survivor Wiesel can put these words of an institutionalized man who's convinced he's God in his novel Twilight, we cannot be mollified in our own non-fictional lives by the idea that the consequence of our behavior lies out of our own hands.

Indeed, Wiesel is saying quite the contrary: it was not up to God, but us.

Chalking tragedy up to a failure of God to respond, without looking at ourselves first, is an escape — passivist, apathetic, enraging.

Holocaust Memorial Week challenges all of us to face head on the aftermaths of World War II in a different way — by looking at ourselves, yes, but in the present.

It is too easy to look retrospectively 50 years past and call human behavior a mistake. In choosing to remember the present, we are inherently remembering the past. It was humans who were responsible for the Holocaust.

Humans, just like you and me.

In remembering the past via the present we will recognize that not much has changed over the half-century.

There is still hatred, prejudice, anti-Semitism. We have all seen it. Thousand year-old persecution of a people does not and will not dry up and fall dead in the short season of our lives.

Nor will it in a week's time.

This week merely asks us all to, by mere recognition of what we are a part of today, recognize and get to know ourselves enough to perhaps prevent a second Holocaust.

It is not up to God. It is not up to anyone but ourselves.

Notes from the Campus Center Basement

Ahem, would someone explain to me why when it is mid-April, and supposedly the planet is getting very close to the sun, thus meaning it ought to be warm outside, why the one day I chose to wear shorts, last Wednesday, it snowed? Oh well . . .

Have you ever gotten that hideous haircut? You know the one that you paid big money for in a salon? I did. It was so ugly that my stomach churns every time I think about it. But thanks to Angelo's Barber Shop on Main St., Noho I have a really nice cut.

Talk about saving the day!

The rally that was held two weeks ago was really well organized for the other colleges. It was very disheartening to have so few of my fellow students there. What does this say about us? Complaints have been filed that we the Collegian didn't publicize it well enough, or that the faculty didn't stop classes to talk about it, or that our students leaders didn't do enough to organize our campus.

All of these may or may not be true, but they are also moot. We as a campus must now look to doing something else to make our concerns known. I suggest another day dedicated to raising awareness. I don't mean a rally on the SUB steps. What we need is a well-organized day that would get more students registered to vote, writing letters to the representatives in Boston, and here's a new idea — writing Moms and Dads. It is time that we tell our parents and families that things are out of hand. If you figure that there are 24,000 students at UMass, with about 21,000 from in-state, that is potentially 42,000 parents, who most likely vote. Add in brothers and sisters and you get a lot of people.

Imagine what would happen if all the representatives found that their jobs were on the line? Might they stop doing what they are doing, ie. nothing? Maybe . . .

Peter Leon

A few members of the Board of Governors tried to take away the Abilities Unlimited, Third World Caucus and LBGA seats again, but the motion (can you believe it?) was withdrawn.

For those of us who have been around too long, we remember that this was once tried before, it failed then and it failed now.

But it is interesting that it was once again the conservatives who tried to do this. When will they decide to start working toward student empowerment and not wasting the time and money of the students in their inane quests to impose their politics and morality upon the rest of the student body?

I thought the conservatives were big on patriotism, but how could they if they are trying to deny people representation, a fundamental here in this good ol' country of Ours.

Or maybe they think only certain people should have those rights, nah, that can't be, that's how the communist party works.

ARTS & LIVING

Tribute to gospel begins today

By NICK OSTIS
Collegian Correspondent

The Beatles drew from it. Listen to the song "Let It Be." The Rolling Stones dug into its vault. Let the chorus in "You Can't Always Get What You Want" wash over you. Its influence undoubtedly flavors Bob Dylan's "Knockin' On Heaven's Door." In certain recordings by Ray Charles, Joe Cocker, Eric Clapton and the Queen of Soul, Aretha Franklin, you can't ignore its presence.

Texas-born Dr. Fred Tillis, who teaches Afro-American Music and Musicians at UMass and is an accomplished trumpeter, remembers serendipitously discovering it.

"Coming back from my silk stocking church (attended by professionals rather than working class people and domestics), I'd pass some very, very exciting music coming out of another kind of church, a sanctified church. Here people celebrated their joy or appreciation of religion in a much more vigorous and down to earth fashion. In that church I heard tambourines and rhythms that were so vital with some of the pensive and mournful qualities of blues, but in a religious context. The musical fabric is very much the same, but the lyrics are different."

Starting today and continuing through Saturday, May 19, the Annual Black Musicians' Conference will pay its respect to this overlooked but pervasive American musical tradition in its theme The Time Has Come: Gospel Music.

The Conference kicks off today with a concert and gallery opening at the Augusta Savage Gallery in the New Africa House at 4 p.m. Chris Coogan performs with a gospel quartet and an exhibition of Lloyd Yearwood's photographs, Classic Gospel Singers, will be on display (until May 7).

On Wednesday, April 25, the film Say Amen, Somebody will be shown at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium with introductory remarks by Horace Clarence Boyer, beginning at 6 p.m. Also, at 6 p.m. WMUA 91.1 FM will broadcast Studs Terkel Interviews Mahalia Jackson, the world's greatest gospel singer.

On Thursday, April 26, at 7:30 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge, Dr. Tillis will act as moderator for a discussion addressing this year's theme. After the discussion there will be a concert featuring Reverend Claude Jeter and Marion Williams, accompanied by H.C. Boyer.

The conference concludes on Saturday night with an 8 p.m. concert, "Gospel Alive," in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall, which will feature the electrifying Mighty Clouds of Joy and the Richard Smallwood Singers.

Dr. Tillis, whose course is open to all University students (not just music majors), thinks "gospel is a powerful, moving idiom — much more so than people believe. People will pay big, big prices to see Anita Baker and Whitney Houston, and well they should. But it might be interesting for them to know that gospel is where they came from. I believe the concerts we'll hear this week will be really exciting. You cannot sit in your seat and ignore this kind of music; that's for sure."

All events of the conference are free with the exception of the "Gospel Alive!" concert. Tickets for that performance are available at the Fine Arts Center Box Office for $22, $20, $18. Five College students half-price. Call 545-2511.

Triangle finale: magical jazz

Magic Triangle Jazz Concert
Hampden Theater
Thursday, April 19

The jazz committee at UMass' WMUA 91.1 FM should be feeling pretty good these days. They have succeeded in bringing together three incredible musicians for Thursday night's Magic Triangle jazz concert, and as a result, offered the audience at Hampden Theater a level of entertainment far beyond the $5 ticket price.

In the minutes before the concert began, the station began turning away disappointed jazz enthusiasts as even standing room filled to capacity.

After listening for just a few minutes, it was easy to see why. The trio was hot — each musician positively shone.

Clifford Jordan provided both sweet and soulful melodies on his saxophone. He exuded confidence when he moved easily through complicated chord progressions and various moods and styles. The respect and admiration he has earned from the jazz community is evident by the likes of musicians he has performed with — Charles Mingus, Max Roach and Art Framer, to name a few.

Bass player Cecil McBee also enjoys the same kind of respect from his peers. His solos at Thursday's concert were technically impressive as well as musically pleasing. In the second set, he performed a Thelonious Monk solo that especially emphasized his virtuosity. No note or chord proved to difficult for him to integrate into his smooth presentation.

One musician, however, truly stole the show. At age 64, Roy Haynes dominated the stage with his fancy drum maneuvers. A sense of humor and an affable personality quickly won him the hearts of the audience. He knew when to kick in some extra beats and when to lighten up. Labeled in the program notes as "one of the greatest living drummers," Haynes' associations have included Billie Holiday, John Coltrane and Charlie Parker.

The concert kept the audience excited throughout two sets and one encore. As was evident by the immediate standing ovation and thundering applause at the end of the concert, Jordan, McBee and Haynes disappointed no one.

Phurst Church of Phun
Hampshire College Saga Dining Commons
Saturday, April 21

The tribe gathered again and the phunsters appeared from near and far. This time it was at the Hampshire College Dining Commons. What happened was the Phurst Church of Phun. The tickets taken were converted to conservation cash, and contributions to homeless people.

After a sprinkling of magic dust and a circular "group sitdown" the king of Phun says, "Repeat after me: Reality is a sandwich I did not order." Who am I to argue? "Reality is a sandwich I did not order."

Here's Wavy-Gravy; open mikes with bongos and basses, movies, poetry and magic, sound delay loops, the Wall of Words — giant art and graffiti in crayon and pastel ("Get After Now"). Painted faces, blessings from the "Sacred Mango" and the group Rainphorest Be-In. But, "Reality is a sandwich I did not order."

Through a long congested hall. "The Speed of Light Show... "The Star Spangled Banner. See the flag on the 30 X 10 sheet? Phasionability at its Phinest — paisley Phractals. Swirling images, deadheads dance, the strobe!

Question — "What were you in a previous life?" Or, "Reality is a sandwitch I did not order."

Down the hall again and a line waits to get into heaven. "An angel will come to get you when it's your time for heaven." No time for that now. I'll get a report later. Into Gregorian chants, Spanish poetry and atonal music, calm constructive audio chaos. .

. calm constructive audio chaos. People of like minds gathering, moving, grouping, changing. . . calm constructive audio chaos. I'm a pinball in the microchip. And, "Reality is a sandwich I did not order."

Meanwhile, Midnight Sun, live rock and light show. A shadow of spinning hair on picture of Indian treaties. Yes, each and every action has Cosmic Significance. Woman in white diaphanous gown twirls her body. Phinally, the long awaited "Report From Heaven." And the band plays "Cross to Bear" because, "Reality is a sandwich I did not order."

Someone must have brought the green dye, the oscillators are warmed up, the Jello is firm, and they've changed the color of the tapioca. Midnight Sun does the "Soul Sacrifice." The light show is a smiling skeleton with three eyes, in the lotus position. Superimposed are multiple Hindu god-heads (Brahma, Vishni, and Siva). "A fat man anticipating a lightning storm" — allowing for the max in headroom. Therefore, "Reality is a sandwich I did not order."

Pixels: creating art on computer

By JACK THOMPSON

Put five graduating art students in a room and ask them about using computers. They might say: "I can manipulate the image how I want it to be". . . "Potential". . . "Exciting tool for the artist". . . "The wave of our future". . . and, "A million possibilities."

The artists are collaborating in a show called Pixels: Picture Elements, running at the Student Union Art Gallery today through Friday. These artists are: James Haskins, Catherine Gilbert, Ronya Boss, Marykate Haley, and Tom Vigneau. The gallery is hosting a reception today from 5 p.m. to 8 p.m.

Here's what they've done:

Ms. Gilbert scanned photos into the computer, changed them on the computer and then took a photo of her screen. These new collage-like photos are mounted as her contribution to the show. She says, "I'm adept at 2-D. That's the direction I want to go with my portfolio."

DuBois and the Pan-African movement

By Pratip Dastidar
Collegian Staff

Two of Ghana's prominent intellectuals recently discussed the role that the great African-American thinker W.E.B DuBois played in the emergence of the powerful Pan-Africanist ideology.

The Ghanians spoke at the annual W.E.B DuBois memorial lecture held on April 18th in the Campus Center. The formal lecture was delivered by Ms. Esi Sutherland-Addy, Ghana's deputy secretary for higher education, and chair of the management committee for the W.E.B DuBois Center for Pan-Africanist Culture in Accra, Ghana.

Ms. Addy thanked the University of Massachusetts for its support of the DuBois Center, and pointed to the University's special status as the sole repository of the collected works of DuBois.

"Many of Africa's greatest national leaders studied in Europe and America in the late 1940's, and experienced the racial tensions in these societies. These included Jomo Kenyatta [of Kenya] and Khwame Nkrumah [of Ghana]," said Addy.

"The young nationalists were deeply influenced by great Diaspora thinkers like Marcus Garvey, George Padmore, C.L.R James and W.E.B. DuBois. At the Fifth Pan-African Congress in 1958, held in Ghana, Padmore and Nkrumah spearheaded a call for the liberation of the African continent. The imprint of DuBois's internationalism and socialist thinking were evident in this crucial meeting."

"Pan-Africanism was too radical for the West, and the movement was split after Nkrumah was overthrown in a coup d'etat in 1966. It was replaced by the Organization of African Unity, that is ambiguous, and plagued from its inception."

Addy reminded the audience of the role played by Nkrumah's Ghana in training liberation fighters. "Julius Nyerere [of Tanzania], Robert Mugabe [of Zimbabwe], Kenneth Kaunda [of Zambia] and Sam Nujoma [of Namibia] were all in Ghana, preparing for their struggles,"she said.

"During the repression of the McCarthy era [in the United States], Nkrumah offered DuBois a new home in Ghana. DuBois spent his old age in Ghana working on an encyclopedia of the achievements of black people. DuBois, Padmore and Nkrumah were all buried in great honor in Ghana."

Addy felt that Pan-Africanism was re-emerging as a force in Africa. She attributed this to factors such as: the understanding of the role of the US Central Intelligence Agency in the killing of Patrice Lumumba (the leftist leader in Congo) and the overthrow of Nkrumah; superpower manipulation of conflicts in the Horn of Africa, Mozambique, Angola and Chad; overt Western support for corrupt African regimes; the stagnation of the OAU; the conflict in South Africa, and pressure from the Diaspora.

Ms. Addy discussed the role of the DuBois Center in Accra in keeping the ideals of W.E.B DuBois alive. Activities at the center include cultural, social and intellectual events. The center recently sponsored conferences on the imminent unification of Europe, and the differences between W.E.B DuBois and Booker. T. Washington.

"Recent visitors at the Center include Minister Louis Farrakhan and Julius Nyerere. Wole Soyinka [the Nigerian Nobel Laureate] will be addressing the center this August," said Addy.

After Ms. Addy's address, Dr. Kofi Anyidoho, Professor of African Literature at the University of Ghana briefly addressed the audience. Anyidoho is an award winning poet and literary critic. He offered UMass gifts on behalf of the DuBois Center, including a carved stool symbolizing omnipotence, and a traditional stole symbolic of the rich African textile tradition.

President/Chancellor Duffey received the gifts and expressed the support of UMass for the activities of the Center. David Dubois, professor of journalism, introduced the speakers and presided over the event.

All the king's men: the tragedy of Nepal

Sunday, April 8th, 1990, will be a date that shall live in infamy in the annals of the history of the landlocked mountain kingdom of Nepal, in South Asia.

On that eventful day, King Birendra, Nepal's monarch, was forced to lift a 29 year-old ban of political parties, thus clearing the path towards the creation of a multi-party democracy. The pro-democracy campaign spearheaded by a coalition of leftist parties and the centrist Nepal Congress Party was launched on Feb. 18th.

Nazmul Chaudhary

Two hundred thousand unarmed demonstrators assembled in Kathmandu on April 6th. The King's security forces opened fire on them. About three hundred Nepali youth paid the ultimate price for freedom, sacrificing their lives to free Nepal from the stranglehold of oppression and despotism. It was this sacrifice that created the momentum leading to the King's announcement on April 8.

King Birendra has ruled Nepal with an iron fist since 1972. Nepal's national assembly is composed of legislators appointed by the king, thus giving false legitimacy to the absolute powers of King Birendra. Nepal, in Western eyes, conjures up an image of an exotic Himalayan land of happy sherpas.

Behind the breathtaking beauty lurks the stark poverty of South Asia's second poorest nation. Nepal, once a net exporter of rice, is now a net importer. Massive deforestation has greatly reduced the availability of firewood.

Due to Nepal's geographic location between India and China, it plays a pivotal role in the ongoing Sino-Indian conflict. India has created it's own buffer zone by annexing the nearby kingdom of Sikkim, reducing the remaining Himalayan kingdom of Bhutan into a vassal colony, and adding to Nepal's economic isolation.

King Birendra had enjoyed the support of Big Brother India, and Nepali cries for human and political rights were ignored by the international community in the name of preserving "regional stability."

Nepal had now become a haven for Indian businessmen, and a dumping ground for Indian consumer products. Meanwhile, the King prevented the development of an indigenous economy. This honeymoon ended when Nepal decided to buy a few anti-aircraft guns from China without consulting India. India replied with an economic blockade, that has not been really lifted to date.

The biggest problem for Nepal's pro-democracy movement is its concentration in the urban areas. The vast majority of Nepal's people reside in the countryside. Many are unaware of the King's corruption and view him as a reincarnation of the Hindu god Vishnu.

The next step for the opposition parties must be to go into the rural areas and gradually politicize the peasantry.

Even though the goal of a popular,just and humane government is still distant, a new path has been laid forth by the blood of the heroic martyrs of April.

Nazmul Chaudhary is a UMass student.

The United States; the birth of 'the' world power

Rudy Krieger

The rise of the United States to prominence as the world power following the Second World War was rooted in the devastation of Europe, the massive expansion of U.S. industrial power during the war, and the Bomb. Since the turn of the century, U.S. industrial growth was such that it was only a matter of time before it outstripped Europe. In short, it was bound to have the greatest quantity of modern toys. Also, the U.S. was a net exporter of capital by the second decade of the century, and had entered the imperialist world with colonial adventures in Latin America, the Carribean and the Pacific.

Anti-colonial movements in the Third World had begun to smash European colonialism, and pave the way for the imperialism of the dollar. The U.S. dictated the terms of aid to the shattered post-war European economy. It urged the opening of markets to all (ie. the US) by lowering tariff barriers to world trade.

Since the mid-19th century, the U.S. touted non-interventionism wherever it lacked power to intervene, and interventionism in Latin America and the Carribean, where it had adequate power. The Monroe Doctrine and its bastard children, the Roosevelt and Wilson corollaries, paint an ugly picture of U.S. imperialism.

The creation of Panama (Teddy Roosevelt boasted that he "stole it fair and square"), the frequent invasions and occupation of nations like Haiti and Nicaragua, and the absolute economic control in these areas, served to ensure a "healthy" investment climate for U.S. commercial interests.

The creation of the United Nations and the Brettonwoods Conference of 1944 were pivotal events in the U.S. drive for global domination.

The U.N. was the brainchild of U.S. thinktanks in 1939. They reasoned that the U.S. would be on the winning side after the war, and devised a mechanism to organize the international political arena in favor of U.S. interests.

Until the emergence of a plethora of Third World nations, the U.S. engineered favorable U.N. General Assembly votes. As late as the 1970's, the U.S. was able to ensure that the U.N. Committee on Decolonization would avoid taking positions that would embarrass the U.S. on the issue of its colonial possession in Puerto Rico.

The Brettonwoods Conference did for the U.S. economically what the U.N. did for it politically. The ostensible purpose of the conference was to organize world trade harmoniously. This masked the fact that it was really designed to promote a climate conducive to U.S. interests, via so-called "open" markets.

The U.S. dollar was accepted as the standard currency of world trade, and was pegged at a value of $35 per ounce of gold. Any nation had to possess U.S. dollars to buy goods on the international market. Poor nations accepted U.S. military bases on their soil to gain dollars through aid and servicemen's spending. The U.S. now had the most far-flung military presence among all the world powers.

The International Monetary Fund was born at Brettonwoods. It would lend money to selected nations in order to correct balance of payments problems and thus stabilize world trade.

The catch was that the voting power in the IMF would be commensurate with the percentage of funds donated by the respective participatory nations. This ensured effective U.S. control of what would prove to be an extremely powerful economic tool of bribery and coercion.

Since Brettonwoods, the U.S. has demonstrated its power to make or break Third World governments through approval or denial of IMF loans, and the imposition of favorable (to the U.S.) conditions on loans usually at the expense of the borrower nation.

The ascendancy of the U.S. to the pinnacle of imperial power was not immediately apparent in 1945, even though all objective conditions clearly indicated it. As the Marshall Plan (to reconstruct Europe) unfolded and made it clear that the U.S. intended to relegate Western Europe to secondary imperial status, the process started to become clear.

The process was most clearly seen in the Third World, particularly in Africa and Asia, the traditional preserve of European exploiters.

The U.S. was now the global policeman. A plethora of U.S. controlled military alliances emerged. These alliances, ostensibly designed to combat the seemingly ubiquitous "communist expansion" created an octopus-like U.S. military presence.

U.S. control now embraced the globe. The stage had been set for the events of today.

ages. The result is, he says, "On the computer screen, a string of images fade in and out." His theme is a commentary on advertising.

Ms. Boss, a non-traditional returning adult student, created an animated fairy tale on the computer and then transferred the images and sound to videotape. She says, "The computer opens vistas in a totally new way; there's a whole world to create."

Ms. Haley is a computer graphics major. She created an illustrated children's book of proverbs. She says, "I wanted to teach myself on the Mac (MacIntosh)." Three hand bound, hand colored copies of her book are on display for this exhibit.

Mr. Vigneau's contribution is a video animation. His description: "A computer character exists in the 'real' world."

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A trial arrangement could lead to a permanent position. You get an earful when you talk with a child's teacher. A compromise may not be acceptable. Hold out for the whole package.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Work hard to repair your relationship with a client or customer. A retiree could receive a windfall. Broach the subject of commitment with care. You do not want to scare someone off!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A personal relationship is revitalized. You look forward to getting together soon. Someone's opposition to an original idea is weakening. Your enthusiasm wins you a coveted assignment.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): It is time to get out and socialize again. Forget past disappointments. You are a vital person and need to be where the action is. Take a chance on a blind date!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Avoid running up new credit charges if you already have trouble paying the bills. Settle a long-standing debt. Get together with an old friend and discuss a business problem. Family ties deepen.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Keep your promises. New contracts bring results sooner than anticipated. Celebrate with someone who shares your interest. You meet a challenge head-on and emerge victorious.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Return telephone calls promptly. Discussing money with an outsider invites trouble. Rely on experts to interpret a contract. Member of opposite sex could distract you from work.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Keep your emotions under control and things will begin to look up in business. Refuse to tolerate prejudice. Check insurance coverage on your valuables before making a trip.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21): Work alone today and you will accomplish more. A telephone call from a college chum could turn your weekend plans upside down. Rearrange your schedule if this person means a lot to you.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Who and what you know are the keys to success today. Behind-the-scenes alliances help someone land an executive job. Recycle old projects to boost profits. Romance is both delightful and funny.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Deal with stress before it affects your work or health. It is time to char your own course. Others will follow your lead. The little things you do now will pay rich dividends.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Give your work top priority. A timely business tip puts you on the road to success. Your social life begins to accelerate. A financial deal requires the assistance of an accountant or lawyer.

Kellerman (14 saves) and tightening to allow the Cadets just three goals after intermission while the offense was heating up.

"I had little to say [at halftime], except what to do on defense," UMass coach Dick Garber said. "We were too casual [in the first half]."

"It seems like we're not coming out to play," said sophomore defender Ricky Mullins. "If we played all the time like we played in the second half, we'd be all set."

And if Rob Codignotto and Jim McAleavey played all the time like they did Saturday, they'd be unstoppable.

Uchill must still be having nightmares of No. 30 dishing and No. 9 converting for easy goals. Codignotto, a senior attack, scored eight goals (and an assist) and junior attack McAleavey added nine assists (along with a goal), both of which are team season highs and personal career bests. Together, the duo hooked up five times.

"I want to get drafted," Codignotto joked of his scoring display. He was alluding to Yale's Jon Reese, who scored eight goals against UMass last Saturday and was a possible selection in yesterday's National Football League draft. (As of last night, neither one had been picked, in case you were wondering.)

"We're unselfish, we want to win," said McAleavey. "I'll pass to whoever's open. When we move the ball like we did today, then we've got it."

Army (4-7) was looking just as tough for much of the game, jumping out to a 2-0 edge and leading after one quarter, 5-4.

"I told our guys they were going to come flying out of the chute, and they did," Garber said. "They've been playing well lately."

A Codignotto goal 24 seconds into the second quarter tied it, and Rich Senatore's first of two goals gave UMass the lead for good. It grew as high as 9-6 when Scott Hiller (four goals, assist) tallied from Tim Soudan at 6:24, but the Cadets closed to 10-9 at the break.

Each team scored only twice in the third, but it was arguably the most physical period of play this season. McAleavey set up both, taking a nice pass from Jamie Bergan and setting up Codignotto alone in front, and then feeding Mike Cain (three goals, assist) behind his head after stealing a clearing pass.

When Senatore and McAleavey clicked 37 seconds apart in the fourth, UMass began to pull away. Steve Heller's goal only interrupted matters before UMass put it away with five straight.

Codignotto had three of those five, including the game-ender with 1:11 left after rap-checking a defender's stick halfway back to West Point at midfield and breaking in clean with the subsequent loose ball.

Scott Frank was the big gun for Army with four goals and an assist, but he was silenced after halftime and the Army victory hopes disappeared along with him.

Pats take defensive draft approach

FOXBORO (AP) — The New England Patriots need good players, and lots of them. So they were willing to give up the third pick in yesterday's NFL draft to get two.

They began re-stocking their aging roster by taking outside linebacker Chris Singleton of Arizona and defensive end Ray Agnew of North Carolina State on the first round with the 8th and 10th choices obtained from Seattle.

"We needed to go to the well as many times as we could and get quality players," said Joe Mendes, the Patriots' director of player operations. "We felt moving down from 3 to 8 was not that big a drop in quality."

The Patriots also gave up their second-round pick, the 29th of the draft, and got Seattle's third round choice this year and fourth round pick in 1991 in the 4-for-2 deal.

That left New England with no second-round pick, but four of the top 63 choices in this year's draft, which ends today. It also gave the Patriots a legitimate chance for a successful start to rebuilding a team that was 5-11 last season and missed the playoffs for the third straight year.

Cockley scored two pitches later when Angela Cardamone threw one to the backstop, Cockley easily beating the play at the plate.

Picking up the last of her three wins on the weekend was sophomore Holly Aprile, who scattered three hits while walking four and striking out eight.

In the nightcap, freshman Darlene Claffey twirled the four-hit shutout for her third win in as many days.

She got all the runs she'd need in the first, as singles by Aprile, Chris Collins and Sheri Kuchinskas scored one run, and pinch runner Tiffany Hodson crossed on a passed ball to make it 2-0.

The clincher came in the fifth, when UMass touched Owl hurler Kathy McCarthy for four more. Mary Duff and Cockley reached on infield hits, and scored on a single by Aprile and a Cherie DellAnno ground out. Collins' single plated Aprile, and she eventually scored the final run on a passed ball.

Nine errors by Maine played a key role in Friday's sweep. UMass scored two runs in the sixth inning to break a 1-1 tie and rolled to a 3-1 win behind the three-hit pitching of Aprile (seven K's). Kuchinskas had a pair of hits.

The second game was more decisive for the Minutewomen, as they pounded out 14 hits in a 9-0 rout. DellAnno, Claffey and Duff had three hits each and Aprile and Kuchinskas added two apiece, while Claffey was holding the Black Bears to three hits.

The highlight of the weekend came in Saturday's first game, when Aprile no-hit the Hawks, 3-0. Only an error and a pair of hit batters blemished Aprile's gem, as she struck out 12 without a walk.

In game two, Claffey yielded just two hits and fanned five in another 3-0 win.

UMass travels to Central Connecticut for a pair tomorrow before returning home to host the University of Rhode Island in a makeup of last Tuesday's rainout. As expected, the Rhody games will be huge as far as the A-10 outcome is concerned.

Gorillas gun down Army

Codignotto, McAleavey pace UMass attack in 19-12 win

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

It's unlikely that even the most sophisticated military training could have prepared Chuck Uchill for the barrage he faced Saturday at The Hill.

The sophomore netminder for the Army men's lacrosse team was victimized by the University of Massachusetts, which continued its scoring ways with a solid 19-12 win.

The Gorillas needed a sound beating of a nationally-recognized team to assert themselves as a team worthy of postseason play. After three quarters of hard-fought action in the Boyden mudbath, UMass poured it on in the fourth quarter to win going away.

More importantly was the defensive job of the Gorillas in the second half, rallying around goalie Ted

Softball sweeps to six wins

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

Some sports teams cherish their time off, to heal wounds or just to rest.

Not the University of Massachusetts softball team — all the Minutewomen want to do is play.

This weekend, UMass got the chance to play and play a lot, and showed what it can do when it gets into a groove. The Minutewomen swept six games from three different opponents at Totman Field.

"More than any other thing, the only thing we needed to do was play," said UMass coach Elaine Sortino. "We came back from California and had 11 days off, then we had eight days off."

Such a performance would bode well down the road, come Atlantic 10 Conference tournament time. Consistency is obviously a must in that situation — and the fact that the A-10s will be played at Totman (May 11-13) doesn't hurt, either.

The weekend marathon started Friday when the Minutewomen swept a pair from the University of Maine. Then UMass got a big boost in the A-10 standings with consecutive sweeps of rivals St. Joseph's and Temple.

Yesterday's twinbill against Temple was the crucial one for UMass, the difference between surging toward the top or falling into the middle of the pack. UM asserted itself with 3-2 and 6-0 wins.

"This puts us right back in the hunt," Sortino said after UMass improved to 6-2 in the A-10 and 17-13 overall. "I'm very, very proud of them."

The opener saw UMass pull out a thriller in the bottom of the seventh. Tied 2-2, freshman right fielder Amy Cockley (two hits) led with a single and went to third when left fielder Jen Swantek gambled on catching the blooper and watched it roll to the fence.

"Our young players have been getting some big hits lately," Sortino said.

Gazelles upset Rutgers, fall to Temple

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

Consistency is something that is always strived for in sports. But it is almost impossible to maintain it over the course of an entire season.

Sometimes, a team can give one of its best efforts of the season, and still lose — like the University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team did yesterday at Temple University.

And sometimes a team can play poorly but still pick up the W — like UMass did on Saturday at Rutgers.

The Gazelles bowed valiantly to Temple, 10-2 in Philadelphia, losing to a squad that will be heading to post season play. The Owls came into the weekend as the No. 4 team in the country by strength of their 10-2 record.

UMass, 4-9, showed signs of pulling off a monumental upset early in the game, battling Temple to a 1-1 deadlock for the first 11 minutes. But Temple's defense was just too overwhelming, allowing UMass only 10 shots on goal.

The Gazelle defense also made it very hard for the Owls attackers, but UMass was the victim of a Temple team that has been a sheer force in the NCAA over the past three years.

"We played extremely well," UMass coach Patti Bossio said. "The defense played fantastic [yesterday]. Temple had to work for every one of their goals."

It has been the play of Marina Krobisch and goaltender Karen pierce over the last week, that has been a major factor in the Gazelles winning two of their last three games.

In those three games, which were played in a span of four days, UMass has limited its opponents to just 21 goals with Krobisch playing the cover point and Pierce making a lot of tough stops around the crease.

"[Marina Krobisch] has played great in the last couple of games," Bossio said. "With the loss of Michelle Pytko to injury, she has taken charge of the defense."

The Gazelles, despite their stellar defensive effort in the first half, were behind 4-1 at the intermission to the Owls who just would not let UMass at their goalie. Senior attacker Sue Murphy and freshman Amy Pond were the only Gazelles able to break the Temple net in the game.

"When they converged on the 8-meter man, they were almost impossible to penetrate," Bossio said.

Pierce (22 saves) held the Owls off as much as she could while Liz Hoye also played some tough D for the Gazelles. The attack also helped out the defense, playing a little slowdown game.

"We tried not to shoot too much, just to hold the ball so Temple couldn't get it," Bossio said.

Which is a little different from the day before when UMass had problems holding on to the ball against a Rutgers team that was 8-3.

The Gazelles played poorly, but luckily for them, Rutgers played even poorer.

"We were playing horrendous," Bossio said. "We turned the ball over 25 times. We really should have beaten that team by 10 goals."

A win is a win is a win though. When you play a schedule as tough as the one UMass has played this year, you take the wins any way you can get them.

With Murphy scoring six goals, Ann King, two, Pond, one, and Tina Pearsall dishing two assists, the Gazelles won relatively easily.

"It was a great win," Bossio said. "We're a great team. We're just not at the level of the Harvards, the Loyolas and the Marylands."

Again though, it was Pierce, leading the way with 19 saves who paved the way for UMass.

"Karen played great," Bossio said.

Booker eighth at NCAAs

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

It's been 16 years since Gene Whalen finished second in parallel bars in the NCAA finals, the last time a University of Massachusetts men's gymnast competed as a national finalist.

UMass sophomore Cal Booker helped make the long wait worthwhile, finishing eighth in vaulting at the NCAA championships in Minneapolis on Saturday. Booker also competed on floor, finishing in the top 20.

Booker made the finals in vault on the strength of a 9.6 on his first vault in preliminaries, while grabbing a 9.2 on his second.

"His first vault was just about perfect," UMass coach Roy Johnson said. "He did a double-front full-twist and stuck it."

"That was my best score — it was the first time I really nailed it," Booker said. "I knew I could score like that, but I just never did it before."

After preliminaries, the top eight competitors move on to the finals, although nine competed in vaulting because of a tie.

"On his first vault in finals, he underrotated, which cost him about five-tenths of a point," Johnson said. "The reason I messed up in the finals was I because I was trying too hard," Booker said. "I was a little nervous, which might have affected me."

Booker scored a 9.5 on his floor routine, an event that was his strongest during the season. "I was really surprised to do better in vaulting, and kind of upset," Booker said. "I feel more comfortable doing floor because I put a lot more into it."

"He tried to do a double-front somersault out of a handspring, and lost about three-tenths of a point," Johnson said. "Otherwise, he would have had a 9.8.

"It was a new and very difficult move," continued Johnson. "You have to try to do something to stand out when you compete at that level."

"I was trying to place in the top six, so I needed to add more difficulty," Booker said. "I was happy to get [the move] out of the way, because now I know I can do it next season."

Booker has shown that there's a lot he'll be able to do in the next two seasons for UMass.

"This meet was a confidence-builder for me — I was amazed," Booker said. "I went into this meet as a nobody, and this should help me.

"Now [other top gymnasts] won't have too much over me," continued Booker.

And chances are good that UMass won't have to wait another 16 years to send an individual to the NCAA finals.

Baseball 1-3 vs. Rutgers in key Atlantic 10 series

The University of Massachusetts baseball took a tumble in the Atlantic 10 Conference standings this weekend, as front-runner Rutgers University took three of four games from the Minutemen at Piscataway, N.J.

UMass (8-4 in the A-10, 19-14 overall) salvaged the weekend in the final game yesterday, taking a 6-5 win after Rutgers had squeezed out a 2-1 victory in the opening game.

On Saturday, the Minutemen were hit hard by the Scarlet Knights, dropping consecutive games, 12-5 and 10-2.

UMass led the opener, 3-2 in the fourth inning before Rutgers got to starter Rich Graham for four runs for a 6-3 lead. Two more in the fifth and three in the sixth off relievers Jerry Creamer and Daryle Corriveau put it away.

In the second game, the Minutemen could muster only three hits, hardly enough to hold off the powerful Knights. Despite a quick 1-0 UMass lead, Rutgers took over with two runs in each of the third and fourth innings off freshman John Russell.

Another run in the fifth off Russell and five more in the sixth off freshman Keith Abernathy closed the scoring for Rutgers, while UMass got its only other run in the seventh.

GEO, Administration negotiate into night

By MEREDITH O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

University administrators and Graduate Employee Organization representatives negotiated the issue of union recognition late into last night, but GEO gave no guarantee that today's scheduled blockade of the Whitmore administration building will be called off.

"If we reach an agreement with the administration tonight, we could modify our action, but it must be a total agreement [on our demands for an election]," said Gerald McCausland, GEO coordinating committee member.

Results of the negotiation were not available at press time.

Last night University administrators issued a statement urging the Graduate Employee Organization to cancel the blockade because it would be a "gross intrusion" on the "hundreds of Whitmore employees" and hinder what they believe to be progressing negotiations.

In the statement, Provost O'Brien said: "In our view, such a blockade would be in violation of the University Picketing Code and a possible violation of the State Fire Code. . .We believe the willful obstruction of university business would make it very difficult to continue our discussions and would set back progress we have already made."

The GEO yesterday wrapped up its three-day 'teach-in' at Whitmore, teaching classes in the halls and in front of administrators' offices to press the administration for "fair and fast" graduate student elections to decide union status. They have also held two sessions geared toward civil disobedience training for today's blockade.

Last week, President/Chancellor Duffey and Provost O'Brien sent a letter to Randolph W. Bromery, chancellor of Board of Regents of Higher Education to ask him for permission to recognize GEO's requested affiliation with District 65/United Auto Workers. The University and GEO, which represents half of the 2,500 UMass graduate student employees, have been engaged in negotiations over the issue of union recognition for the last three months. Last May, the GEO voted to affiliate itself with District 65/United Auto Workers.

The administration's statement expressed warnings that if today's GEO blockade obstructs Whitmore employees from entering the building future negotiations would be damaged.

"The administration believes considerable progress has

Students and faculty confer over date rape

By AMY HENRY
Collegian Staff

Several students and faculty met yesterday to develop a plan of action to combat the problem of date rape on the University of Massachusetts.

The conference titled: "A Day of Action Against Date Rape on Campus" was held in response to the findings of a survey conducted by the Student Affairs Research and Evaluation Office last spring.

The survey asked men and women a series of questions about unwanted sexual experiences. It was found that 10 percent of the women who answered the questionnaire had been raped.

The three groups formed at the conference made about 25 recommendations aimed at discussing concrete steps to effectively deal with date rape.

Some suggestions were: that the vice chancellor's office would be urged to develop a zero tolerance policy towards date rape, male residential assistants would have a special training on date rape, Sigma Alpha Mu, a UMass fraternity, would ask the Men's Resource Connection, an organization of men who are trying to change men's roles in society, to help educate men on date rape in the Greek System.

Provost Richard O'Brien, said the UMass administration would do everything it could to minimize date rape on campus.

"Safety should come before education," he said.

Pat Barrows, head of the Counselor Advocate Program at the Everywoman's center, spoke on rape in a national perspective. In 1985, a national survey of 7,000 students done by Mary Koss, found that 1 in 4 college women are victims of rape or attempted rape and 1 in 15 men admitted to doing this.

She said rape victims are affected emotionally and physically, may become pregnant, contract sexually transmitted diseases, could have sexual, vocational, spiritual or educational problems and face many other difficulties.

"Rape effects women at the core of their being and it permeates the rest of their life," Barrows said.

Barrows said some of the characteristics of rapists include: having early sexual experiences, belief in rape myths, growing up with family violence, using pornography, alcohol and drug abuse and membership in a group whose culture supports rape.

In our society date rape is not that abnormal, Barrows said.

"In a society where sex roles are so different for men and women, in which men are not allowed to show feelings but are allowed to be aggressive and women are supposed to be passive nurturers who do not say no. When women say no men say well that is okay because yes means no," she said.

Barrows said it important for women to get in touch with their pain, sadness and rage over the issue of rape.

"When we get in touch with our feelings we can transform the situation. I believe things can change," she said.

Meg Kroeplin, a UMass student, and a representative of the Orchard Hill Women's Center said she hoped for more faculty attendence at the conference.

"I really wish faculty would realize what an important role they play in a student's life, not just academically," she said.

Natasha Diephuis, president of the Student Government Association, said that as Police close in on mall killer

By SARAH DEMASTER
Collegian Staff

Investigators looking into the slaying of Sharon Galligan are still waiting for the anonymous writer of a letter supposedly naming her killer to come forward, said State Police Lt. Edward Harrington yesterday.

The letter, sent to Hadley police about 10 days ago, said, "Sharon Galligan was killed by . . . "

Northwest District Attorney Judd Carhart's office, which is in charge of the investigation, has received no calls from the public regarding the note, Harrington said.

Police have located a man whose name is similar to that stated in the note, but will not question him until they are sure he is the person named in the letter, he said.

"We'll wait and see if more information does surface, hopefully from the writer," he

Holocaust Memorial warns of anti-Semitism

By CHRIS MUTHER
Collegian Staff

People need to remember the Holocaust to make sure it does not happen again, said Randi Dubno, president of the University of Massachusetts Hillel Foundation.

At the Holocaust Commemoration Service yesterday in the Cape Cod Lounge, Dubno said it is important for people not to forget the Holocaust because the same thing could happen today.

"There is anti-Semitic oppression going on all over the world, in Ethiopia there is severe oppresion and in the Soviet Union also," she said.

People should not stand for anti-Semitic remarks and should speak out against them, not let them go unnoticed, she said.

"Apathy leads to Auschwitz," she said, referring to the Nazi concentration camp in Poland where more than three million people were killed.

When each speaker concluded their part of the service, they lit a Yarzheit memorial candle to symbolize the six million Jewish victims of the Holocaust.

Rev. Esther Hargis from the United Christian Foundation said people need to find the courage to act against oppressive behavior in order to prevent another Holocaust.

"Whenever you hear an oppressive remark and say nothing, you are participating in that remark," she said.

Oppression against Jewish people is increasing, Hargis said, on college campuses and worldwide. She said she has spoken to many Jewish students who have been harassed on campuses.

"We need to learn from the past and start confronting family and friends and changing people's attitudes about oppressive behavior," she said.

Mark Adler, chair of the Holocaust Memorial Week 1990 Planning Committee, said the week is a remembrance of the Nazi extermination of not only Jewish people, but homosexuals, the handicapped, Gypsies and Communists.

He said the "remarkable changes" in Eastern Europe have lead to a new string of nationalistic and anti-Semitic violence in that part of the world. These events are also overshadowing important dates.

"When you ask someone what Nov. 9 means to them they will tell you it's the night the Berlin wall came down, not Crystal Night, the night one of the largest massacres against the Jewish people took place," he said.

Irish speaker decries British propaganda

de Baroid from BETWEEN says it is not religious war

By MEREDITH O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

Criostoir de Baroid, secretary of the Irish pacifist organization BETWEEN, said the media's portrayal of the conflict in Northern Ireland as religious is simply a product of English propaganda.

"This is not, not, not a religious war," he said.

Baroid, speaking to more than 50 people in the Campus Center last night, said reporters are under tremendous pressure to mirror British propoganda.

"When someone tries to tell the truth, they are squeezed out [of the country]," he said.

He blamed the English for purposely pitting the Catholic and Protestant groups against one another.

"Religion is just the label [the British] use to explain the violence," Baroid said. "By trying to describe the Northern conflict as a religious war is like trying to say the Vietnam war was a conflict between Christians and Buddhists."

"The British government has, in the interests of dominance, created the divisions in Ireland using the divide and conquer idea," he said.

Saying he decries all forms of violence, Baroid said the poor, working-class Irish are the ones who are suffering most from the violence of English soldiers stationed in Northern Ireland.

"This is a time of terrible trauma for these local communities," he said.

The occupying British soldiers continue to use "naked, vicious terror" against republican Catholics who challenge British control over Northern Ireland, he said.

Baroid described Ireland as being "pummeled into the ground" because the working class has refused to accept British conquest for hundreds of years.

The BETWEEN program, funded through contributions and a small grant from the Southern Ireland government, is run by volunteers.

Baroid said its goal is to "heal the divisions created by a foreign power."

Baroid, a practicing Catholic and "community worker," said BETWEEN condemns violence and advocates the reunification of Ireland. "Our volunteers promote human relations in the Northern Irish community," he said.

Jim Dee, UMass student and facilitator of the lecture, who said passed a four-inch long rubber bullet which he said is commonly used by the British soldiers to dissipate Irish protestors.

Dee said the bullets travel at a velocity between 160-200 m.p.h. and are fired by soldiers at a distance of less than 20 yards. He said the bullets are frequently "doctored" by British soldiers who put batteries and pieces of metal inside them.

Baroid said although there are political differences between Protestants and Catholics, "the crust of prejudice is not impenetrable."

Students fight in Campus Center

By PAMELA PERRAULT
Collegian Correspondent

Police are investigating a fight they were called to Sunday on the Campus Center Concourse. When police arrived to the scene, the brouhaha had ended. A man involved said another man sprayed him in the face with mace.

In other police reports:

LARCENY

- A man reported that his vehicle was broken into in lot 26 Friday and that the stereo was stolen. A witness observed two subjects smash and steal the stereo. Estimated value: $215.
- A woman reported the theft of her wallet Friday from a table in the Campus Center Coffee Shop. Estimated value: $50.
- A woman reported Saturday the theft of a wiper blade from her vehicle in E lot. Estimated value: $15
- Staff from the Fernald Greenhouse reported Saturday the theft of a gro-plant lamp. Estimated value: $15.
- Police were called to Amherst Towing Saturday for a damaged vehicle that had been towed from the lot 32 access lane. Estimated damage and the theft of a jacket: over $1,000.
- The janitorial staff in the Campus Center reported Sunday the theft of two radios and speakers from their work area on the second floor. Estimated value: $330.

Panel to discuss homophobia

A panel discussion will take place tonight focusing on homosexuality. The panel, titled "Homosexuality: Disease or Dis-EASE" will look at the myths and realities of homosexuality and bisexuality.

The Panel, which will be moderated by Dr. Jo-Anne Thomas-Vanin, dean of students, will consist of Jeff Hersh, director of Mental Health Services; David Miller from Counseling and Academic Development; Lydia Rackenberg, therapist from Mental Health Services; Bonnie Strickland, professor of psychology; and Ritch Savin-Williams, visiting professor of psychology.

According to Felice Yeskel, director of the Program for Gay, Lesbian, and Bisexual Concerns, the panel will protest homophobia and biphobia.

The panel will also focus on the myth of homosexuality as a disease and the origins of homosexuality and what professionals have to say about it, she said.

Yeskel said she feels the panel is a more constructive way to deal with an individual's homophbia than the "Straight Pride" rally being held today.

"True heterosexual pride means being comfortable with all sexualities, this rally seems to come from a fear of homosexuality, which the panel will look at," she said.

The panel will begin at 7:30 in room 804-808 of the Campus Center and is open to the public.

been made in the made in the many discussions with GEO representatives over the past three months," the statement said. "We believe the willful obstruction of university business would make it very difficult to continue our discussions and would set back progress we have already made."

The major sticking point which has put a deadlock on negotiations is the University's claim that unless the Board of Regents or the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission recognizes GEO's unionization, they are legally prohibited from awarding recognition.

said. However, Harrington added that if the writer does not come forward, police will confront him when they feel they have enough information to determine whether the man they have located is the man in the note.

Harrington said if they believe the man named in the note is a suspect, they "want to wait and approach him last, because if we don't have enough evidence to arrest him, he may try to dispose of evidence or find an alibi."

He added that people with information about Galligan's activities at the University of Massachusetts still assume that investigators know everything about her.

"Even if people think the information they have is irrelevant, let us decide that," he said.

He said investigators learned only three weeks ago that Galligan was a member of a judiciary board at the University which weeks before her death held a hearing where disciplinary action was taken against a student. Harrington said that while this student is not a suspect in the case, he wished that someone would have contacted investigators about her involvement on the board.

Investigators are asking that people with any information about Galligan contact the district attorney's office at 586-9225, Harrington said.

Holocaust

The Holocaust was not just the period from 1939 to 1945, Adler said, because hate against Jewish people has never stopped and it started long before the Holocaust began.

"The Holocaust has never stopped, it is an event of world importance and something that could still happen if we forget the past," he said. "We need to remember the past so we can survive the future."

Rabbi Saul Perlmutter chanted a Kaddish, or prayer for the dead, to conclude the service and the UMass Hillel ZAMRIM Choir sang a memorial prayer.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Disobedience is last hope

Today, graduate employee members of GEO/District 65/UAW from around the campus will be engaging in a nonviolent civil disobedience action at Whitmore. If necessary, many of us (myself included), will be arrested.

Paul Nakroshis

It should be made clear that this action is not something graduate employees take lightly.

We are risking arrests, our jobs and the education we have all worked so hard for.

I want to take this time to explain my reasons for taking what may seem like an extreme position.

During this academic year, GEO/District 65/UAW has been organizing a union drive. We have collected over 1,400 cards from graduate employees and have been attempting to obtain collective bargaining status.

The reason for this goal is simple: teaching assistants, associates, research assistants and interns are employees of this University. And as such, we feel the need to have a voice in the determination of our working conditions.

In view of the fiscal situation in the state now, this need should be even more apparent.

We are not asking for anything unreasonable.

All that we are requesting is a fair, democratic election so that the graduate employees on this campus can decide whether they want to be represented by GEO/District 65/UAW, any other union that can garner enough support to be on the ballot, or no union at all.

By the end of March, GEO had reached an understanding with the University that the election would be modeled after normal state union elections.

However, several days before we were due to go before the Board of Trustees, Chancellor Duffey refused to return our phone call asking to see what the election proposal would look like.

We received the proposal an hour before the meeting and, in that proposal, the Chancellor proposed a union election that wouldn't pass as democratic in any state in this country.

In the Chancellor's "democracy," GEO would have to obtain a majority of those eligible to vote. Thus, a person that does not care enough to vote counts as a "no" vote.

In more concrete terms, if the number of graduate employees eligible to vote is 2,300, and 1,100 people vote for GEO and no one votes "no," GEO loses.

Nevertheless, this ridiculous proposal passed through the Board of Trustees. It was clear that any proposal that Chancellor Duffey brought before the Board would have passed.

At a meeting with the Regents Subcommittee on Labor several days later, the administration claimed that they just received from the State Office of Employee Relations a letter that said that the Board Of Regents cannot recognize GEO and that the proposal brought before the Trustees was meaningless.

Meanwhile, Mary Lou Anderson, chair of the Labor Subcommittee, has gone on record saying that it is the Regents' legal opinion that they can recognize GEO.

Avoiding the pain of detailing the rest of the chronology, it is now obvious that Chancellor Duffey is the main obstacle in the way of a democratic election.

By his refusal to talk with the GEO before going to the Trustees, he has shown his true colors.

He is clearly intent upon stalling us in the hopes that the GEO/District 65/UAW will just fade away.

Furthermore, the process of negotiation with the University has merely resulted in a new politicized legal opinion whenever the Chancellor found it convenient.

In a conversation with Randolph Bromery, the Chancellor of Higher Education, he told me that if Chancellor Duffey clearly states that a democratic election for recognition should be set up, "The Regents lawyers will find a way to make it legal."

Therefore, the decision lies in our Chancellor's hands.

All that we are asking for is a fair democratic election this semester. The right of the people to decide issues in this manner is something that I believe in very strongly.

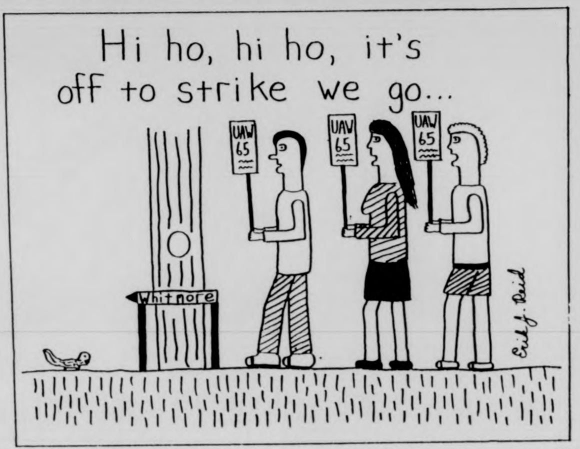
I am willing to fight for this right in a dignified, nonviolent way, even if it means risking arrest.

I would not be doing this if I felt that continuing to talk with the Administration would do any good.

The GEO encourages all members of the University community to join us in our blockade of Whitmore today, and we hope you can attend the 12:15 support rally.

Chancellor Duffey is stalling, and we would like to assure him that the GEO will not fade away.

Paul Nakroshis is a Teaching Assistant in the Physics Department at UMass



Holocaust Memorial Week marks the remembrance of present

This week is Holocaust Memorial Week, a week-long series of events commemorating the destruction of the European Jews.

Of the 50 million people killed in World War II, 13 million were systematically exterminated by the Nazis and their allies and collaborators.

Seven million of them were gypsies, communists, gay men, political dissidents, common criminals, physically or mentally disabled and others. Six million were Jews.

During the reign of the German Nazi party from 1933-1945, Jews played a unique role.

It was on anti-Semitism that the Nazis came to power.

From the boycott of Jewish businesses in 1933 to the Law for the Protection of German Blood and Honor in 1935 to Kristallnacht in 1938 to direct extermination in 1941 to 1945, the Jews were always the focus of Nazi persecution.

But the Holocaust was not a uniquely German atrocity limited to World War II.

In Czechoslovakia, Austria, Bulgaria, Romania and Hungary, (countries allied with Hitler), the government helped to send the Jews to their deaths.

In France, Holland, Belgium, Norway and Greece (countries occupied by the invading Germans), Jews were shipped in railcars to the camps in Poland.

The first exterminations of Jews, totalling 1.5 million murdered, were in the occupied areas of the Soviet Union.

Although the first of many concentration camps was in Germany, all of the six extermination camps were in occupied Poland.

Only in occupied Denmark were the Jews snuck out of the country into willing neutral Sweden.

The other neutral or Allied countries were openly unwilling to take Jewish refugees.

Mark B. Adler

This included England and the United States. The whole world is responsible for the Holocaust.

The murders did not end in 1945 when Germany surrendered unconditionally.

When the few surviving Jews were permitted to return home, there were pogroms (organized mob attacks and murders by local communities against Jews) in Poland and eastern Europe.

The penniless, famished refugees were not allowed into their only haven, British-owned Palestine.

In Europe today, in the same countries that participated in the Holocaust only 45 years ago, nationalism and anti-Semitism are on the rise.

With the dawning of the democracy movements in Eastern Europe comes the freedom of speech for anti-Semitic groups.

In just the past year, there have been rallies, marches and attacks against Jews in Hungary, Poland and the Soviet Union.

The Soviet people now openly blame the Jews for both Bolshevism and Western-style reforms.

While many of us (myself included) applaud the independence movement in the republic of Lithuania, we can't forget that its capital Vilnius (once Vilna) was the center of Jewish life in Eastern Europe.

Like most Americans, I congratulate the achievements of Poland's Solidarity party, but much of its anti-Communist campaigning last summer was based on anti-Semitism.

In the United States of America, land of the free and home of the brave, we have noticed a rise in racism and anti-Semitism. Sadly, there is also a tension between Blacks and Jews in America.

On our very campus there has been a sharp increase in vandalism and harassment.

The German Holocaust of the European Jews ended in 1945, but nationalistic and racist anti-Semitism still flourishes in all of Europe, America and the world.

Just as in the Passover Seder, Jews all over the world recount how we were slaves and how God led us out of Egypt.

We all are involved, and we must remember the present.

Mark B. Adler is the Chair of the Holocaust Memorial Committee at UMass

Centralized power of residential administration must end

I've finally seen enough.

I was a resident of Washington Tower, a Resident Assistant and this is my seventh semester as Cluster Office support staff. I've taken all the messages, run all the errands, shuffled all the appointments and office hours and heard the complaints.

Remember the janitor in the film "The Breakfast Club?" His big line was, "I am the eyes and ears of this institution."

It's time that the UMass campus community opened theirs.

Southwest/South residential education is having an identity crisis. The Resident Director in Washington preaches to her staff about how to be a "people person." The theme is social awareness and open-mindedness and a strong focus on interpersonal communication skills. Their agenda seems to be quite clear.

What is not clear, and what is in complete opposition to this mindset, is the way in which the student staff (R.A.s and A.R.D.s) are being railroaded by the residential education administration.

Matt Oulett is an Area Coordinator from Southwest/South who has consistently stifled the voices of the student staff – where's the focus on open communication there?

His inability to see any faults in his R.D. staff, just in case it might reflect on his hiring judgment, has blinded him when R.A.s and A.R.D.s have been treated unfairly – open-mindedness?

The mechanical smile, the "active listening" nod and the pre-recorded responses all result in the same frustrating lack of action. This is not a "people person." This is a res-ed android.

Margaret Magner

What has prompted me to write this article, is an A.R.D. has been told that his contract will not be renewed next fall. He has been the A.R.D. in Washington for six years and has worked for four different R.D.'s. The R.A. staff is outraged.

Carole Pastula, the R.D., has sited his commitment to his wife, son and newborn baby as part of the reason. Since when is a strong family commitment a strike against you? I guess that means he has other concerns besides Washington Tower. I guess he's not a robot, maybe he's even human. Shame on him.

Five years ago Washington Tower had two A.R.D.'s, a Student Development Assistant and a Staff Development Assistant. Now there is one A.R.D. and one R.D. This centralization of power is dangerous to the entire residential community. Once again Matt Oulett automatically backed the decision of his R.D. (who incidientally went to college with him) and ignored the insights and criticisms of Carole by the R.A. staff.

The res-ed android complex is hitting hard. The R.A. position has been drastically changed from one of educator/counselor to floor police and social awareness robot. How can you teach unity and diversity with a mechanical smile and pre-recorded responses?

This preaching about respect of backgrounds of all peoples comes from an R.D. in Southwest/South who told her A.R.D. who is from Irat to college with him) and ignored the insights and criticisms of Carole by the R.A. staff.

The Beat Cafe offers something for everyone

By ANTONIA MAGUIRE
Collegian Staff

If you can relate to a trio whose idea of a Bed and Breakfast is a fistful of slim-jims and a patch of green grass, appreciate acoustic guitar dripping with R.E.M and Lou Reed, want to hear Voices in the Dark and don't mind a touch of heavy post punk groove, then The Beat Cafe at Hampden Theater next Wednesday is right up your street.

If you've never been to the Beat Cafe, this is your last chance this semester, and it's really not to be missed. As you walk in you're offered coffee and other refreshments, and you walk out having lapped up the talents of four very different performers.

Tommorow's line up are all promising student performers from the local area. The evening will kick off with the soulful saxophone sounds of Voices In The Dark, a quartet who will perform a selection of original and contemporary work. Following them, accoustic guitarist Ari Vais who has been quoted as having "passion and energy that one rarely sees in a solo acoustic show." With a style ranging from soft and melancholy to hard and angry, Vais' influences include R.E.M, Neil Young, Velvet Underground and Lou Reed.

Goin' West is the title of the piece to be performed by the third act The Fabulous Giggin' Bros., whose Bed and Breakfast philosophy lies above. This is the three man travelling improv/theater troupe who believe that it's a good day when you can eat and drink at the same time and an even better day when you don't have to pay for it. The Giggin' Bros. write, produce and act in their skits which they claim are influenced by the theater of the absurd. This is the band who were ordered to clean the stage by an irate theater owner after they "broke into an impromptu game of vegetable softball" during a performance.

Rumble Puppy round off the evening of visual and musical delight with their heavy post punk groove sounds. Having played numerous hall shows in Western Massachusetts, this drum, bass and guitar playing trio has hit the WOZQ's top play list with it's recently released EP entitled Out Of The Box Car And Into Your Speakers.

You can immerse yourself in this plethora of talents for a small price at the Beat Cafe on Wednesday, April 25 in Hampden Theater, courtesy of the Residential Arts program. And you'd be a fool to miss it.

Hampden Theater is located at the top of the horseshoe on University Drive, between Fearing St. and Mass. Ave. Tickets are available at the Fine Arts Center Box Office or by calling 545-2511.

The UMass Department of Music and Dance is the unsung genius of this campus. Considering the abundance of talent, enthusiasm and utter professionalism the department's image is definitely low-profile. This is about to change. The upcoming "UMass Student Dance Concert" will ensure that.

The performance presents eight scintillating original dance pieces created, choreographed, rehearsed and performed by UMass students. The wide range of choreographic input enables the show to encompass a fascinating eclectic mix of different dance styles.

The evening will consist of two ballet pieces ("Aurora" and "See The Music, Hear The Dance"), four modern pieces ("Spectroscopic Delineations," "Shades of Blue," "Sanctuary" and "Bellula") and a lyrical jazz piece ("Days of Future Passed"). The performance is closed by Leslie Miller's beautifully choreographed and highly moving "Orzibal."

A good dance performance is breathtaking. Of all the fine arts, it is the most readily accessible and understandable to the general public. It can be appreciated for many reasons; from the intricacies, power and genius of fine choreography to the grace, dedication and beauty of a well rehearsed dancer.

One does not need to be a bespectacled "culture vulture" to appreciate the representation of highly personal emotion through outstanding body movements enhanced by radical lighting and costume design.

Patti-Anne Kenny, a junior dance major appearing in the show, commented, "This performance is where we really put ourselves on the line. Because the production is entirely student organized, it is a real test for us and our training as performers. From conception to the closing show, it is all our own work."

"UMass Student Dance Concert" is presented by Alive with Dance and funded in part by the Student Affairs Cultural Enrichment Fund can be seen April 26, 27 and 28 at 8 p.m. at Bowker Auditorium. Tickets are on sale at the Fine Arts Center box office or at Bowker Auditorium on the night of the production. Ticket prices are $4 for general admission, $3 for Five College Students, and $1 for senior citizens and children.

Folksinger Phillips fights for people

Folksinger and storyteller Utah Phillips called me for our interview from a pay phone near Walden Pond. I confessed that I had never heard his music before.

"There's no reason why you should," a gruff but friendly voice on the other end of the line said, and I knew this was going to be easy.

Phillips is a throwback to the old days; the days of Woody Guthrie and Pete Seeger. In between riding trains, writing poetry and reading books, he travels across the land singing traditional songs about the working people and fighting for their rights.

To Phillips, it all comes naturally. "I sing old songs that come out of tradition," he said. "I find stories and sculpt them with my own language until I feel comfortable with them. It's a simple thing. I can't do complicated things."

Phillips, who runs for President every four years on the "Sloth and Indolence" ticket ("I keep winning because I'm not in the White House,") is a strong advocate of power to the people. "Bush doesn't have any power," he said. "He's a figurehead. As long as we go out and protest and wave signs, we give him power. I refuse to do that."

Phillips believes that if the people want something, they should get together and do it themselves. He said the best Presidents were 'do-nothing' Presidents.

So he'd love it if Dan Quayle became President, right?

"He can't be trusted to do nothing. I'm afraid he'll try to do something."

When Phillips takes the stage at the Iron Horse tonight, it will not be his first time. He fondly remembers 16 years ago when he hitchhiked to his gig there, and slept in the bushes outside the Lord Jeffery Inn. "I thought, 'Maybe tonight I'll sell some records and get to sleep inside.'"

He's yet to sleep inside the Inn, but that doesn't matter to him. All he wants is to make people happy. "I like to be in a room with people laughing and singing," he said.

Tonight, he'll be where he wants to be.

Celtics pass over Shaw for NBA playoff chase

BROOKLINE (AP) — The Boston Celtics announced yesterday they will stick with their current roster and not add guard Brian Shaw for the playoffs.

"We discussed it at length, but the timing isn't right," coach Jimmy Rodgers said as his team practiced at Hellenic College for Thursday's opener of a best-of-five NBA playoff series with the New York Knicks at Boston Garden.

"The team that we worked with for the playoffs is out there. That's the team we will go with," Rodgers said. "I'm very pleased with the way our team is playing. We're very together, I very simply like what we have.

"This is the 1989-90 Celtics basketball team and they guys worked very hard to get there," he said.

The Celtics had until yesterday to decide whether to add Shaw, who jumped from the NBA just before training camp to play for Il Messaggero Roma of the Italian League.

The Celtics announced Feb. 27 that they had reached agreement with the 6-foot-6 guard Shaw on a multi-year contract beginning in the 1990-91 season.

Shaw, the Celtics' top 1988 draft pick out of Cal-Santa Barbara, averaged 8.6 points in his rookie season.

He plays on the same Italian League as former Duke forward Danny Ferry, who was drafted by the Los Angeles Clippers in the 1989 draft. His NBA rights have since been traded to the Cleveland Cavaliers.

WOMEN'S ISSUES

Anthropologist on Mayan women

By LINDSAY HOADLEY
Collegian Staff

Foreigners can burn our leaves and cut our limbs but they cannot take away our roots, said Juanita Batzibal Tujab to a group of people seated around a richly colored tapestry symbolizing Mayan culture.

Batzibal, anthropologist and president of the National Mayan League of Costa Rica spoke last night in the Student Union Ballroom as part of her tour spreading the message of Mayan Culture.

"Since 1492, everything written about Mayan culture has been written by foreigners, not by the people," Tujab said. "When I went to school I was told that my people were nothing but small tribes and devil worshippers. We know, however, that our ancestors were great scientists and Doctors."

Her Spanish-spoken words were translated. She emphasized the cultural role of Mayan women.

"Mayan women always have played an important role in society, which is why the Mayan League chose me, a woman, to be president of the organization," she said.

According to Tujab, one of the most important roles is weaving, because it is an expression which preserves the history and culture of the Mayan people.

"We are dressing ourselves in true books. Most people see the fabric for the beauty, the way it looks. But they are unable to see what it means," she said. "The government does not love our culture, they want it for glory. They like the clothing but exploit the people who wear it."

Tujab said the government attempts to impose opposition between Mayan men and women, yet she said the two sexes are harmonic.

"Women in Mayan society are the center of family and society, even though they have tried to instill the idea of machismo in males," she said. "Women are not just objects, they are threads of communication, threads which share our culture with other people."

"When a woman is expecting a baby, she starts explaining the nature of earth to that baby," she said. "When the baby is born, it is through the women that tradition is learned. This happens even though the government is trying to take our culture away."

According to Tujab, there are many ways that Mayans are denied their tradition and culture.

"When a Guatemalan woman goes out for work, they'll say, 'We'll hire you, but you must take your kind of clothing away, and use our language.' "

In this way the government denies our human rights, and we know through the United Nations that culture is one of the rights humans have, she said.

Womb for Rent — A Pro-Choice Comedy
Hampden Theatre
Saturday, April 21

It's kind of hard to write a review about a production in which one of the main objectives is for the audience to guess which cast member is menstruating, but Sleeveless Theater's Womb for Rent, a hilarious yet poignant pro-choice comedy, is such a production.

The production consisted of 13 skits, many of which discussed the history of birth control and abortion. As the women took turns reading the history, the rest of the troupe acted out the episodes. When one woman read that the church decreed that fetuses receive souls at 40 days for boys and 80 days for girls, another woman complained, "males always come first."

The skit, "A Word from Our Sponsor," poked fun at sexism in the workplace. It depicted a woman who is never let in on corporate decisions until she buys 'The Equalizer' (a cucumber), and is suddenly taken seriously.

Pro-life activists were also parodied through Operation Hairdo, a bunch of God-fearing fanatics who resemble Dana Carvey's Church Lady character with big hair. These sexually repressed women complain that "every abortion is a lost head of hair." In their protest song, "Choice Busters," they sing, "We've got God on our side/God likes girls who shave."

In "The Tug-a-Woman Contest," a pregnant woman was literally tugged on three sides by the church, the court and pro-life activists, all delaying the woman's decision to have an abortion until it is too late. But alas, when the baby is born, neither the church, court or activist wanted it. They tossed the newborn tot from one another frantically.

The women also took turns telling certain facts, such as Ronald Reagan's utterly stupid quote, "Abortion is only advocated by people that have already been born."

But it was the recent Webster Decision, which gives states the power to regulate or ban any abortion rights, that Sleeveless Theater focused on.

In "Post-Webster Travel," a computer told women which state was safe to have an abortion in. Unfortunately, one poor young woman without parental consent had no place to go. The lights dimmed as she was told to go to Back Alley Travel. It was by far the most chilling scene.

The troupe depicted the future history of women's rights, in lieu of the Webster Decision, as something that would make even George Orwell shudder. People are arrested and labeled "pinko commies" for having wet dreams and "laying millions of sperm to rest." Only fat white men are allowed to vote, thus making Jessie Helms President. Women are branded with UPC (Uterus Pre-registration Code) symbols so the government can know what their uterus is up to at all times. Finally, entrepeneur Donald Chump, promising "a condo in every crotch," buys all the wombs of the world.

Womb for Rent succeeded in doing the near impossible. It took the controversial issue of abortion and educated people on it. In showing the sheer absurdity of the anti-abortion movement, they drew mad gales of laughter from the delighted crowd of men and women. The troupe's standing ovation was very much deserved.

A view of feminism

What is a feminist?

Contrary to popular thought, a feminist isn't necessarily a gung-ho, hairy-legged, butch dyke, pycho-crazed, separatist wanting only the castration of all men.

A feminist is any person, male or female, who believes that women have been oppressed, and that this is unjust. A feminist is committed to an ideology of gender equality.

Diane Hicks

Agreeably this is not a radical desire, yet feminism remains to be treated with disrespect in our society. This is not without exception, however. In fact men on this campus have identified themselves to me as feminists.

Indeed apathy has not crippled the feminist movement, with nationwide networks such as the National Organization of Women, and local groups like the Progressive Organization of Women's Rights, feminism lives on.

The problem here lays in the fact that feminism is a movement, simply an ideology yielding an array of contradictory perspectives on its basis.

Propositions of equality shouldn't cause controversy. Whether it is gender, race, nationality, class, or any other means of identification there should be no question of human inequality.

The simple fact is that a woman earns roughly $.65 to every $1 a man earns in the workforce. In addition, a four year college degree grants a woman the same career potential as that of a male high school drop out.

These statistics clearly illustrate the perpetuation of sexist and discriminatory attitudes in today's society. Women should be commended on their protest of this disgraceful reality, yet those who fight are instead met with negative stereotypes.

To many the label of "feminism" implies separatism; a battle between the sexes, instead of the fight for gender equality that it is.

More radical approaches to feminism, often adhering to separatist thought are usually termed "militant feminism." In this label it is the word militant not feminism that depicts a separation of enemies and allies.

Women that subscribe to feminist thought are usually considered to be un-feminine. Meaning these women haven't the qualities associated with femininity such as: compassion, nurturing, vulnerabilty and passivity.

Because of their "non-feminine" nature, feminists are sometimes deemed unnatural. Protesting oppression is very natural however; but because the accompanying destruction of stereotypes threatens tradition many aren't sure how to react.

Those looking on should consider the oppression of women, and understand that although feminism is looked down upon, femininity is seen in no greater light.

"Feminine qualities" are seen as weaknesses in our society, with the media often depicting women as the lesser sex. With this those qualities deemed feminine set a foundation for arguments supporting male superiority.

Those qualities aren't weaknesses, nor are they possessed solely by women, but instead by any humane individual. One may be a feminist, and at the same time feminine — the two are not mutually exclusive — the labels are simply that.

I'm simply awaiting the day that a question of one's feminism may be posed directly instead of in the hushed voice, without the unaccepting wrinkled nose or followed by the apathetic "what is a feminist anyway?"

Author Bateson stresses need for flexibility

BY TAMARA SILBERMAN
Collegian Correspomdent

Flexibility and a broad vision of life are the cornerstones for a creative and diverse life, Mary Catherine Bateson said yesterday, to some 100 people at the University of Massachusetts Campus Center yesterday.

As the basis for her book, Composing a Life, Bateson, a professor of English and anthropology at George Mason University, studied five women and the techniques they acquired for constantly adapting to life.

"We're all good for three incarnations," she said.

Bateson also said even though most young women are told to narrow their focus in order to start their career, it often leaves them bereft of flexibility. The flexibility and visionary stance that enables people to adapt to the circumstances of life are being educated, said Bateson.

Bateson learned a lot from writing her book that she did not expect, especially the ability of the women to "recycle" old lifestyles and reuse them in current situations, she said. Bateson said people should be aware of the single issue approach that concentrates on too limited a focus.

"Any living organism requires more than one function at a time," she said.

She criticized university and corporate decisions that are aimed at short term growth instead of instituting policies that look ahead to the future.

"Companies must show an interest in the communities they serve," she said.

The adaptability of women has not gained the appreciation it deserves, she said. According to Bateson, women often do more of a variety of work than men do. Women tend to evaluate the process over the final product whereas men are taught to be goal orientated, she said.

What Bateson discovered when she set out to write her book was that women "bridge discontinuity," — the difference between work and home by adapting to different situations even changing careers if necessary.

Bateson said the advice she has for young women is always to be willing to learn new things and to view life as an improvisational process.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Handle your finances personally to prevent costly mistakes. Sticking to conventional business methods will help keep you out of hot water. Show up for a date on time. Be discreet about a previous romance.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Delegate routine tasks in order to have more time for thinking and planning. Once others understand a problem, they will be eager to help. Make the most of your special talents.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your ambitions are fired by what you see someone else accomplish. Self-discipline is essential if you hope to reach your goals. You find a novel solution to a nagging problem. Avoid bragging.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Let others think they are in control and then slip quietly past them. A family feud can be ended with a phone call. Romance is happier the second time around. Dress elegantly tonight.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You find a unique way to deal with a financial problem. Do not let your high standards slip. Make things easy for friends and family members who work overtime. Promote a community project.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Computer science makes it possible for you to vacation and work, too. A charming new romantic partner may be too good to be true. Proceed with caution. Guard savings.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A practical approach helps you solve a work problem. An amusing incident is recalled. Although family members enjoy a hearty laugh, you feel embarrassed. A platonic relationship needs nurturing.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A relationship needs more time to grow. Someone may be confused by too much advice. Be mindful of the kind of example you set for a child. A new romance has tremendous potential.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Try to work from home today in order to avoid distractions. A short trip produces some special memories. A conversation with a young person proves revealing. Relax with a good book tonight.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You get an unusual opportunity to do a favor for a relative. Loved one will never forget your kindness. A financial situation is not as bad as it seems. Romance looks terrific.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): The emphasis now is on fulfilling your dreams. Your relationship with a newcomer is in the limelight. A candid chat clears the air. Your keen sense of humor rescues you from a tight spot.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A ticklish situation requires great diplomacy. Your mate might be able to handle it best. Talk over the alternatives. You could be the recipient of a happy surprise today or tomorrow.

Carter, Bruins push Montreal to the brink

The Boston Bruins are one game away from their second Adams Division championship in three years, after beating the Montreal Canadiens, 6-3 last night at The Forum.

Boston leads the best-of-seven series, 3-0, and can clinch with a victory in Game 4 tomorrow night at The Forum. The Bruins have not swept a series from the Canadiens since 1929.

John Carter had a pair of goals, including a shorthanded tally that gave Boston a 1-0 lead at 9:49 of the first period. Ray Bourque's goal made it 2-0 before Montreal rallied to tie behind goals from Todd Ewen and Russ Courtnall.

Carter's second goal at 5:30 of the second period put the Bruins on top for good, and less than two minutes later Brian Propp converted for a 4-2 lead. Montreal coach Pat Burns pulled goalie Patrick Roy in favor of Brian Hayward, but it didn't matter.

Don Sweeney and Dave Poulin gave the B's a 6-2 lead before Courtnall's second goal finished the scoring.

Central Conn. next in line for softball team

By DAN SARAZEN
Collegian Staff

Today the University of Massachusetts softball team will travel to Central Connecticut in the hopes of continuing its seven-game winning streak.

The Blue Devils enter the doubleheader with a 18-10 record and Central Conn. coach Ron Pringle feels that beating the Minutewomen would be an achievement in itself.

"I think UConn and UMass are the two best programs in the region." said Pringle.

The Blue Devil coach claims program size and funds have an effect on the field, "We're (Central Connecticut) the little sisters of the poor," Pringle said.

Minutewomen coach Elaine Sortino sees it a little differently. Pointing out the fact that she lives in Massachusetts, home of the $800,000,000 (and growing) deficit, Sortino said, "We're the big sisters of the impoverished."

The Blue Devils' major weapon comes in the person of Jeanne Villegas who currently is clubbering opposing pitching to the tune of a .453 batting average, a .874 slugging percentage, eight homers, four doubles and six triples (Wow!)

After Villegas, however, the next best batter is hitting .211. Pitching and defense are the strong points for this Central Conn. team.

The Blue Devils pitching staff currently has a 1.15 ERA thanks to the work of Michelle Bedard (10-3) and Lori Frederick (8-5).

Tommorow (3 p.m.) the Minutewomen will make up the previously postponed doubleheader against Rhode Island at Totman.

The UMass softball team travels to New Britain, Conn. today to face Central Connecticut in a 3 p.m. twinbill.

Baseball hosts Central Conn.

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

The road has been unkind to the University of Massachusetts baseball team. The Minutemen are 5-11 away from home and 14-3 on Lorden Field.

If home cooking is what UMass needs, home cooking is what they will get.

The Minutemen return from a disappointing 1-3 weekend trip to Rutgers, which dropped them from a first place tie with the Scarlet Knights to second place in the Atlantic 10. Today the Minutemen host Central Connecticut (3 p.m.).

"[The weekend was] not what we would have hoped but we salvaged the weekend [with a split on Sunday]," said UMass coach Mike Stone.

Central Connecticut comes to Amherst ranked second in New England with a 19-8 record (not including yesterday's game against Maine). Fear not, Holy Cross entered its game with the Minutemen ranked second in New England, and left 14-3 losers thanks in large part to Daryle Corriveau who pitched a masterpiece.

Once again, Corriveau gets the assignment against a second-ranked team. In his last two starts Corriveau is 2-0, allowing just three runs in 18 innings. The Blue Devils used their top three arms this past weekend against conference foe Maine. However, the Central Connecticut staff is deep, the team ERA is an excellent 3.68, so do not expect their fourth pitcher to be a pushover.

"They're always ready to play us," Stone said. "They have a good record and good pitching."

David Adam leads the staff with a 5-0 record and a 1.57 ERA, Paul Caccavale is 2-1 with a 2.48 mark and Jim Sarandesa is 2-1 with a 0.64 ERA.

Their hitting is not too bad either, as a team the Blue Devils are batting .307.

Mike Sciortino is spanking the ball at .468, while teammate Bob Stefanik is hitting .420, and Vin Rossy is at a .384 clip. The Blue Devils, like the Minutemen, like to steal bases — they have stolen 63 bases, but have been caught 23 times. Stefanik has 15 swipes in 16 chances.

Field notes: Drew Comeau failed to break the record for most doubles in a season this past weekend in Rutgers. Comeau currently has 15 on the season, and his next two-bagger will give him the record.

In case you missed it, Jerry Creamer batted for the first time this season at Rutgers. The Minuteman reliever drew a walk.

Brian Bright continues to chase the record for most homers in a season (12), Bright has seven. UMass has outhomered opponents 31-19.

UMass controls their own destiny, if they sweep Temple next weekend in Boyertown, they will be guaranteed a spot in the A-10 tournament playoffs.

Miscellaneous sports stuff

The University of Massachusetts rugby team traveled to Providence, R.I. this weekend for the Providence Tournament. The A-team dropped a pair of games, but the B-side had a much more successful weekend.

The A-teamers dropped an 18-0 match to tournament champion Brown University, followed by a 4-0 loss to Norwich.

The B-team advanced to the finals, beating several A-teams along the way, before falling to the Coast Guard Academy, 19-6. Along the way there were wins over Brown, Johnson State, Babson and Rhode Island College and a tie with Wesleyan.

The University of Massachusetts women's tennis team will be sponsoring a May Day Tennis Tournament on April 27-29 at the Upper Boyden Courts.

There will be singles play for males and females and doubles for males, females and mixed teams. There will be two divisions of play in each group.

Play for singles begins Friday, April 27 at 5 p.m. while doubles begin Saturday, April 28 at 10 a.m.

Students may sign up at the Campus Center Concourse table today or tomorrow or by contacting the tennis office. Entries fees are $12/singles and $20/doubles. Sign-up deadline is Wednesday.

The seedings draws will be posted on Thursday at 5 p.m. in the Athletic Dept. and also at the Upper Boyden Courts. Entrants are responsible for finding out their own starting times.

For more information, stop by the tennis office or contact coach Edwin Gentzler at 545-1950.

Women's track finishes second

Several qualify for championship meets; Penn Relays next

By DEBI LU COUTURIER
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts women's track team found itself in the company of powerhouse Brown University and Northeastern Saturday at Providence, R.I.

Once again the small contingent from UMass was outnumbered but not undaunted. Brown easily won the meet with 97 points while UMass grabbed second with 43 points and Northeastern scored 36.

Senior Shana Smith provided two New England qualifying performances, running the 1500-meter race in a winning time of 4:41.8 and following up with a second place finish in the 3000 meters with a time of 10:12.2.

Freshman Maureen Meldrim proved that she is on the comeback trail, finishing third in the 1500 with a 5:01.8. Junior Laura LaVallee, always the steady performer, ran a 5:04.4 in the 1500 for fourth place and followed with a 10:56 in the 3000 for fifth.

Freshman Becky Johnson ran a superb 800-meter race, leading a talented group of Brown runners, fighting off a late challenge and finishing first with a 2:14.9.

The 400-meter race pitted UM's Lee Ann Ambrose against Brown's Teri Smith, a fourth place finisher in the 400 meters at the 1990 Indoor Nationals. At the 300-meter mark, Ambrose and Smith were shoulder to shoulder.

When the dust settled, Smith edged Ambrose by three-tenths of a second to win. Ambrose ran a 54.2, smashing her own school record of 55.32 and qualifying for the ECACs in Virginia.

In the throwing, Tina White and Rachel Castriotta displayed their usual lack of concern toward the number of their opponents. White won the hammer with a toss of 141-6, an ECAC qualifying throw, and placed third in the discus with a 118-foot toss. Castriotta took third in the hammer (117-10) and second in the discus with a New England qualifying throw of 118 feet.

The 4x400-meter relay team of Becky Johnson, Lennice Johnson, Ambrose and Dana Smith took second place with a time of 3:59.6. The 4X100-meter team of Sue McFadyen, Lennice Johnson, Smith and Ambrose also placed second with a 50.7 finish.

Kathy Hennessy high jumped in the rain to a respectable third place finish.

Tomorrow, coach Julie LaFreniere takes her team to the Penn Relays. Surrounded by some of the best track and field talent in the country, the Minutewomen are looking forward cto the challenge and the opportunity of smashing some school records.

GEO: No blockade today, maybe tomorrow

Students, administrators continue progress on demands

The Graduate Employee Organization did not go through with its threat to blockade the Whitmore Administration building yesterday, opting to continue negotiations with University administrators after progress was made on their demands of the previous evening.

The GEO is scheduled again to gather outside Whitmore today at 7 a.m. for a possible blockade if demands are not reached in negotiations.

After a 10-hour negotiating session Monday, GEO leaders and University administrators came to terms over three stipulations — voter eligibility, supervision of the election by a neutral party and participation by intervening groups — that the GEO said would have prevented a "free and impartial" election.

Mark Kenen, a negotiating committee member, said the progress represents a "total conciliation on terms for an election."

The administration dropped its demand that it determine which graduate students would be eligible to vote in the election. All teaching assistants, teaching associates and research assistants would be eligible to vote as of Sept. 15, 1990.

According to the administration proposal, graduate interns and fellows would also be eligible if "their duties and responsibilities are substantially similar to those of TAs, TOs or RAs."

The election, which would be supervised by a "neutral, independent third party," would allow any "employee organization" with the support of 10 percent of the students to get on the ballot, according to the proposal.

That differs from the original administration proposal that would allow any "organization representing graduate students" on the ballot.

Both sides agree the final hurdle before an agreement can be reached is when the election will be held. The administration wants to hold the election in November 1990 to allow time to find a neutral third party as well as iron out technical problems.

The GEO was formed in 1988 to act as the representative for graduate students on campus. Since last semester, the GEO, an affiliate of District 65/United Auto Workers, has intensified pressure on the administration by holding several marches, meetings and teach-ins.

But GEO members in yesterday's demonstration said that they want to hold an election this semester while momentum is high.

Emily Isaacs, an English TA, said she and many of her colleagues are afraid administrators will wage an anti-union campaign since administrators have said they will not take a "pledge of neutrality," or remain unbiased during the election campaign.

"A lot of things have happened in the past 10 hours under a great deal of pressure," Isaacs said. "But much could happen in the six and half months before the election."

Chancellor/President Duffey said a November election would allow sufficient time for "all the issues to be explored and

Mayors critical of 'hypocritical' drug war

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Democratic mayors blasted federal drug policy chief William Bennett yesterday, accusing him of ignoring treatment, education and poverty in the federal war on drugs.

Boston Mayor Raymond L. Flynn called Bennett "a little bit hypocritical" for focusing on law enforcement and failing to address the hopelessness that drives inner-city youths to drug abuse and the drug trade.

New York Mayor David Dinkins said Bennett had "sent exactly the wrong signal" by suggesting drug education programs don't work.

"Bennett's repudiation of drug education was cynical statement from the man who ran the education department through the era of 'just say no,'" Dinkins said. "But it was a typical example of the type of leadership we're getting from Washington — leadership that says we have more needs and then gives us less."

Bennett was secretary of education during much of the Reagan administration. First lady Nancy Reagan made the slogan "just say no" the centerpiece of her anti-drug efforts.

Dinkins and Flynn spoke as the U.S. Conference of Mayors, the organization of Amherst College student found dead in dorm room

A 20-year-old Amherst College student was found dead in his dormitory room Monday night, Amherst Detective Noreen Mulvehill said yesterday.

Stevaki Lobb, of Burlington, Vt., a sophomore, was found by the Amherst Police Department, who responded to a call from college security at 8:51 Monday night, Mulvehill said.

The Springfield Medical Examiner's Office determined the cause of death to be asphixiation. The Amherst Police Department declined to release details surrounded Lobb's death.

After ruling out foul play and considering the cause of death, police closed the investigation yesterday afternoon, Mulevehill said.

Amherst College Spokeswoman Terry Allen said members of the Counselling Center met with students in the Pratt Dormitory, where Lobb lived, Monday night and yesterday to discuss the death.

One student said the affect of the death could be felt all over campus yesterday "It was pretty gloomy . . . students weren't smiling nearly as much as usual."

$20,000 in computers stolen from psychology

By MICHAEL WESTER
Collegian Staff

Some $20,000 worth of computer equipment was stolen from the psychology department in Tobin Hall sometime last weekend, police said yesterday.

According to Melinda Novak, chairwoman of the psychology department, doors to offices on the fourth and sixth floors were jimmied open and four computers were stolen.

Staff members noticed large gouges in the wooden office doors when they arrived at work Monday morning, Novak said.

The thieves probably were familiar with the building and the location of the equipment, Novak said. Anyone could have "cased the place" in as little as an hour, she said.

"I think they were looking for a specific kind of computers that sell well on the black market," Novak said.

'Circus' atmosphere erupts on SU steps

Students exchange shouts, shoves at 'Straight Pride' rally

By CHRIS MUTHER
Collegian Staff

Verbal warfare erupted among students in the form of shouts and death threats at a "Straight Pride" rally yesterday on the Student Union Steps.

It was not supposed to happen that way, rally organizers said. What started as a rally to celebrate "normal and traditional American sexual behavior" became what several observers noted was a "circus-like atmosphere," complete with a flag burning, several shoving matches and unabashed displays of affection.

More than 150 people attended the rally, organized by the University of Massachusetts Chapter of Young Americans for Freedom. The rally had a "50-50" mix of "straight pride" supporters and students supporting homosexual and heterosexual pride, including members of the Lesbian, Bisexual and Gay Alliance, according to rally organizers.

Ted Maravelias, a UMass student, said the Bible only recognizes one sexuality, heterosexuality and homosexuality was "sinful." His statement was met with both praise and laughter.

"It is the responsibility of every nation on this earth to recognize the holy word of the Lord," he said.

Maravelias said he was upset that student funding went to organizations like the LBGA and to events like Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay Awareness Week. Maravelias' speech was cut short when Jonathan Leavitt of the Radical Student Union ran to the podium and kissed Maravelias on the cheek.

Several members of the LBGA responded by holding hands and forming a semi-circle to protect themselves from threats that were being shouted by "Straight Pride" rally members.

Two other students from the RSU set an American flag on fire. A woman in the crowd carrying a Bible then grabbed the flag from them and stomped out the flames.

Police reported that the woman was not seriously injured.

LBGA member Benjamin Eder, who spoke at the rally, said he supports "straight pride," but said the idea mocks the experience that homosexuals have suffered.

big-city mayors, concluded a two-day meeting with police chiefs on the drug problem.

Their comments came a day after Bennett addressed the gathering and encountered only gently challenging questions.

"What's with these guys?" Bennnett said in an interview after their later remarks yesterday. "I was there [Monday] . . . . Did they wait until I leave and then snip at me? Some of these folks think leadership is coming to Washington twice a year and complaining."

Bennett called Dinkins' remarks "New York bull." Bennett said he had never repudiated drug education but said that education alone was not sufficient to keep young people away from drugs.

The mayors issued a closing statement urging the Bush administration to reverse itself on its opposition to providing federal aid directly to the cities to fight drugs, rather than routing it through the states. Mayors contend states have kept the drug-enforcement money for themselves or delayed in passing it on.

Illegal drugs cannot be fought without addressing urban poverty, joblessness and despair that encourages people to seek escape through drugs and makes drug dealing the easiest route to affluence, the mayors said.

"They got the best and most expensive equipment we have."

Although four computers were stolen, more than four offices containing computer equipment were entered, Novak said.

In addition, petty cash and back-up computer disks storing data and manuscripts were stolen, Novak said.

"It doesn't mean the data is lost forever, but it does mean a tremendous setback in time and energy." she said.

"In one case, [a faculty member] lost everything he had on his computer because they took the backup disks as well," she said.

The University of Massachusetts Department of Public Safety is investigating the matter.

discussed on campus" and for the GEO to get the consent of the Board of Regents for Higher Education.

"There is only three weeks left in the semester," he said. "It's not too unreasonable to suggest that there is not enough time left."

Duffey said the administration is not prepared to take a pledge of neutrality because of the "extrordinary" nature of the election. The GEO gained the right to hold an election from the Board of Regents of Higher Education rather than from the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission, which normally grants union elections.

"Heterosexuals have never been victimized or persecuted in the same way that homosexuals have, heterosexuality has always been accepted," he said.

Homosexuals have had to fight battles to gain rights, Eder said, and people still do not look upon those accomplishments as legitimate.

His speech was meet with screams of "faggot," "You're going to die of AIDS," and "You take it up the butt."

Craig Fraser, a member of the Young Americans for Freedom, said he was pleased with the rally overall.

"I was pleased the gay community turned out as well as the straight community, but the flag burning was just too far out in the left," he said.

Four journalists discuss South Asian conflicts

Terms regarding South Asia conflicts

The following are definitions of terms used in the accompanying story:

- The Maldives Islands are the site of a 1988 Indian military strike in response to an attempted coup by Tamil mercenaries.
- Article 370 is a constitutional clause that ascribes considerable autonomy to Kashmir.
- Gurdwaras are Sikh temples.
- Khalsa Panchyats are militant-controlled village governments.
- The Muslim United Front is a pro-independence Islamic faction.

Four of the most distinguished journalists from the South Asian subcontinent discussed volatile regional conflicts at a forum Monday at Amherst College. They reviewed Indian foreign policy in the aftermath of the intervention in Sri Lanka, the uprising in Kashmir, the conflict in Punjab, and the military dictatorship in Bangladesh.

Sunanda Datta-Ray, editor of the Statesman, India's major English-language daily, said he thought the foreign policy under the new government of Prime Minister V.P. Singh was more benign than under previous leader Rajiv Gandhi.

"The new External Affairs Minister Inder Gujral, is his own man. Foreign policy is being dictated by the Foreign Office, not a small coterie of bureaucrats, as under Rajiv Gandhi," he said, adding that the Foreign Office still operated in the British imperial tradition.

Datta-Ray said one of Gujral's first actions in office was to visit the Maldives islands. Datta-Ray said Gujral also expedited the withdrawal of Indian troops from Sri Lanka, visited Bangladesh, and promised the Nepalese government separate trade and transit treaties. India had imposed an economic blockade on Nepal after contention on trade and Nepal's dealings with China, Datta-Ray said.

"The decision to send Indian troops into Sri Lanka was rooted in shadowy state agencies that are not part of the political structure," he said.

"India's security lies to the South and the Indian Ocean, not in the North and Pakistan," he said. "All European invaders came from the ocean. India's naval buildup will continue."

Discussing the United States academia, Datta-Ray said: "Here [in the United States], your academics are put in think-tanks in Washington, D.C., and then neutered."

I.A. Rehman, editor of the Pakistan Times, described the Kashmir crisis as the gravest threat to world peace to-

Jews, Germans discuss Holocaust, reunification

By JULIA SEREBRINSKY
Collegian Correspondent

More than 45 years after six million Jews were exterminated by the Nazis, a panel of six Jews and Germans gathered at the University of Massachusetts Campus Center to reflect on the historical effects of Holocaust and share their views concerning the impact of a German reunification.

The panelists agreed that the prospect of a reunified Germany should not project a fear of a possibility of another Holocaust, simply because there are almost no Jews left in Germany.

The panelists did give a lukewarm reception to a reunification because East and West Germanys have evolved into two separate nations economically, culturally and politically after they were forcefully split following World War II.

"I don't feel the need to be unified with East Germany," said Clara Finkele, a West German graduate student at UMass. "For me it is a different country," she said.

Sigrid Brauner, a professor of German at UMass, said that she felt "elated and excited" when the Berlin Wall came down last November, but was not as eager to see a political reunification with East Germany.

"People from East Germany were as foreign to me as people from Czechoslovakia," she said.

"I think that [reunification] is a horrible idea that should be resisted," said panelist Thomas Roeper, a linguistics professor at UMass. "Having a common government [of East and West Germany] has no human purpose at all except in terms of a fictitious notion of culture."

Karin Obermeir, a graduate student at UMass, an American of German descent, said that the prospect of German reunification seemed like a revolution. "I feel that there has been swallowing up of East by the West," she said.

The panelists agreed the Jewish community should not feel threatened with the prospect of German reunification and expressed hope for a German-Jewish dialogue and reconciliation.

"We should look at how we can build a dialogue and live beyond a fear with the new Germany," said panelist Steven Malamud. "The reconciliation should be backed with . . . our hearts and our minds."

In an effort to do so, a German-Jewish dialogue has been scheduled for Wednesday, May 2, at 7:30 p.m. in the Newman Center. For further information, contact Leslie Morris at 584-1508.

Armenians remember massacre

By DARREN GARNICK
Collegian Staff

On April 24, 1915, the Turkish Ottoman government executed several hundred Armenian political opponents and intellectuals. During World War I, the Turkish army disarmed and deported the minority Armenian population. By 1922, the Ottoman Empire had killed 1.5 million Armenians through executions, starvation and death marches.

Members of the University of Massachusetts Armenian Student Club set up a table outside the Hatch yesterday to tell people about the Armenian genocide.

Many students who sat at the table are grandchildren of Armenians who escaped from Turkey in 1915.

Christopher Sarkisian, president of the Armenian Student Club, said his grandfather was ten years old when he watched his father get beheaded by Ottoman troops in the town of Kharpet. His grandfather, along with two brothers, dressed as girls to escape because the Turkish army were sparing the lives of Armenian women, he said.

Panel: Homosexuality not a disease

Says it's time to cease using stereotypes

By CHRIS MUTHER
Collegian Staff

Homosexuality is not a disease and people need to increase their understanding of alternative sexualities, a panel of experts said last night.

Speaking to a standing room crowd in the Campus Center, therapists, psychologists and professors said homosexuality is normal. They said one could not and should not stereotype homosexuals as being anything other than people.

Bonnie Strickland, a University of Massachusetts professor of psychology, said the myths and stereotypes come from years of looking at homosexuality as strictly a disease.

"The first study using a healthy population, which included lesbians, wasn't until 1969. The study found that basically there were no differences between heterosexuals and homosexuals," she said.

She said lesbians, bisexuals and gay men live in an "incredible atmosphere of hate and violence," which is equivalent to what other minority groups experience.

Ritch Savin-Williams, a visiting professor of psychology, said bisexuality is the most misunderstood sexual orientation, but said it is probably the most common.

"In a study of sexual orientation, in over 16 million married couples one or both members of the couples said they were sexually aroused by the same sex," he said.

He said bisexuals have faced increased violence because of AIDS.

"Bisexuals are seen as the carriers of AIDS to the straight community and as a result they're facing an increase in oppression," he said.

David Miller, a counselor from the UMass Counseling and Academic Development Office, said the most homophobia comes from institutions of society.

"People have learned from their church, school and family the myth that homosexuality is bad, but through reeducation people can work out their homophobia," he said.

Lydia Rackenberg, a therapist from Mental Health Services, said internalized homophobia can have a "profound" effect on the lesbian, bisexual and gay community.

"Lesbians and gay people accept limits placed on them by society in family, relationships and career development," she said.

She said the best way to get rid of stigmas attached to homosexuality is for people to realize the struggle that goes with being homosexual, and to constantly reaffirm that struggle.

Vietnam committee members seek changes

By MINU SEBASTIAN
Collegian Staff

Dr. Vo Van Ai and Penelope Faulkner, members of the Vietnam Committee on Human Rights, discussed human rights conditions in Vietnam with a small group of students and faculty last night in the Campus Center.

Vo, a native of Vietnam, said the poverty in his country is crushing workers and children. "Money in Vietnam is not used for the people; 50 percent of the money is spent on defense while only 3 percent goes toward education."

He said for real change to take place, the West needs to put human rights at the forefront of all dealings with the Vietnamese government. "At present there is support for the regime, instead of the people," Vo said. "It is unthinkable that 65 million Vietnamese should again have to fight to achieve their fundamental human rights."

He said peasants and students are protesting unfair land distribution and the discriminatory educational system.

Many writers and human rights activists are also in prison, he said.

Students from the United States protested the Vietnam War 20 years ago, which put pressure on the U.S. government, Vo told the audience. "Once again Vietnam needs your help."

Faulkner, commenting on how the Vietnamese government closed Vietnam to the outside world after 1975, said there are "re-education camps" which have been hidden from the public.

"The camps are forced labor camps which are imposed on people because of their religious or political beliefs," Faulkner said, stressing the need for political reform and a need to "open up international channels."

The Committee passed out a four-point proposal, which states there should be a peaceful and democratic transition in Vietnam. The proposal will be presented to the Vietnamese government. The Committee hopes that international organizations, labor movements and caring people throughout the world will sign the proposal.

2,000 activists converge at Wall Street to stress connections to ecological crisis

By NATHAN KRYSTALL
Collegian Staff

NEW YORK — Over 2,000 environmental activists from across the nation, including dozens from the five-college area, convened at Wall Street on Monday to protest corporate responsibility for environmental degradation.

One of the stated goals of the action on Wall Street was to prevent trading from commencing that morning at the New York Stock Exchange, the bastion of the corporate power structure. However, a massive deployment of the New York Police Department allowed its doors to remain open.

Monday's action brought together a wide spectrum of left-wing causes, including activists from green parties, anti-toxin and anti-nuclear groups, gay rights organizations and anarchists.

As protesters converged on Wall Street from prearranged points before dawn, they were met by several hundred police officers who, having arrived first, successfully blockaded the street for the entire day. Only persons who worked on Wall Street were allowed through the barricades, upon producing identification.

Demonstrators concentrated on disrupting the flow of traffic toward Wall Street by moving in mobile clusters through the surrounding streets, blocking intersections with their bodies and objects such as empty trash cans and borrowed police sawhorses. As groups of police officers closed in on the protesters, many of whom wore black masks and hoods, the clusters retreated, only to hone in on another street.

The protesters kept up these cat-and-mouse tactics the whole day, but not without cost. By midday, police said they had arrested 154 people, with dozens more being arrested in the afternoon. Most were released within hours of their arrests.

A noon rally brought a respite in the day's proceedings. While speakers lambasted corporations for their role in polluting the environment, protesters chanted "Wake up now, Save the Earth."

Connecting Wall Street With Ecocide

Howie Hawkins, one of the event's organizers, said the action was aimed at radicalizing Earth Day by targeting the root cause of the ecological crisis.

"Wall Street symbolizes corporate power and the economic system of capitalism, and capitalism is based on a competitive struggle that grows endlessly and aimlessly. You can't balance that with the environment," he said.

Hawkins, a representative of the New England Green Alliance, said the action was intended to reach not only serious environmentalists but also the public at large.

"We're trying to get across the message that we need to change our economic system fundamentally and radically," he said. "We need to democratize the economy so decisions about what we produce and what technology we use to produce it can be decided rationally and democratically by the people on the basis of human need and ecological integrity, not profit maximization for the rich."

Hawkins said the official Earth Day program blames the victims — the consumers.

"Earth Day guilts people about what they consume when the choices they have regarding what is available for consumption are not made by consumers, but by profit-oriented capitalists," he said. "So Earth Day completely missed the boat."

Kris Kaniecki, another organizer, said people should take environmental awareness into their personal life.

"This doesn't mean just not using plastics or using recyclables, but considering yourself an activist and becoming more active in the environmental movement," she said.

Local Students Join Action

People for a Socially Responsible University organized a group of 30 students from the five-college area to take part in Monday's action. Nine students from the group, mostly from Hampshire College, were arrested.

For the past two years, PSRU have been pressuring universities, including the University of Massachusetts, to convert their military-funded research grants to civilian funding for socially-responsible projects.

Randy Viscio, a PSRU member from Hampshire College, drew parallels between the military, corporate industry and the ecological crisis.

"Industry is a tool of the military and that's good for corporations because they can make money," he said. "But we want to see industry become a tool of the civilian sector by getting institutions like government and universities to invest in smaller, consumer-positive companies."

Consumer-positive companies produce goods that people really need, that don't impact on the environment and that are of good quality at a fair price, Viscio said.

Beth Bandy, a PSRU member from UMass, said that it's important to make connections between corporations and the military.

"It's easy to sit back and say corporations are not connected to military endeavors when, more often than not, the two fit together frighteningly well," she said.

Chris Jennings, a PSRU member from Hampshire College, said the action was very empowering.

"There were so many people that work on so many different issues that tie into Wall Street," she said. "It wasn't a traditional rally. The tactics were so different because of the mobile clusters."

T.L. Popejoy, a recent Amherst College graduate who was arrested at the action, said he considered the day a major success.

A stockbroker at one of the Wall St. checkpoints

"It took a major deployment of the NYPD to keep the stream of ecocidal capital flowing, so it was a major success," he said.

Stockbrokers voice support

Although the major media reported the day as business as usual for Wall Street stockbrokers, it was clear that some of them were thinking about the connections between their employers and environmental breakdown.

Eddie Kramer, an investment banker, said he agrees with the issues raised by the protesters but feels powerless to effect change at his company, which he did not wish to identify.

"I'm just a worker on the lowest rung of the ladder," he said. "There's not much concern for the environment at my workplace but, hey, I need the money."

Alan Hack, who works in Morgan Guaranty's financial advisory division, said that a lack of awareness about environmental issues among city-dwellers, who tend to be the majority of corporate executives, might be one reason that corporations impact so heavily on the environment.

"I mean, look at New York. This place is a hell-hole as far as I'm concerned," he said.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted

Rally devalues identities

The "Straight Pride" rally was a disgrace to all conscious members of the campus community. To promote a rally for heterosexism diverts attention from real issues. It was a cop-out – a way to avoid dealing with homophobia, the fear of homosexuality.

Homophobia is an indication of people's insecurity about their own sexuality and a need to conform to stereotypical roles prescribed by society.

Reaffirming one's own heterosexuality does not promote consideration of others who may lead a different lifestyle. Being proud of one's identity promotes self-respect, but ignoring and chastising the identity of others is oppressive and disgusting.

Instead, there should be more focus on education to understand homosexuality. We live in a society where difference is looked down upon. The University is a place to rise against the forces of society and to learn about oneself and the world around us.

The University is a place to critically analyze ourselves and society. When we fail to do this, we miss out on vital growth necessary to be productive citizens in the larger society.

The "Straight Pride" rally had no place at this Universtiy. No one needs to learn how to be ignorant.

Housing diversity proves nothing

Glancing through the Collegian the other day, I was struck by one whole page sponsored by Housing Services devoted to specialized housing in the dorms.

I continued to read on to find out more about how I could join the work-out floor in JQA if I really wanted to.

Maybe I could narrow my mind just a bit more by becoming a member of the Social Diversity floor in Brett. All I have to do is attend the widely-offered information sessions to see if I'll "fit in" to the narrow-minded mold Housing Services has created by developing such closed environments.

My intent here is not to condemn those students who prefer to be with others of similar character. After all, that is part of our nature to want to belong to a particular group.

However, this great educational institution thrives on the diversity of the student body.

Everyday, we are faced with people who hold different viewpoints than us, who dress differently, who spend their time participating in diferent activities.

But this is how we are exposed to variety in life, how we more firmly develop our own interests, and how we become more accepting of those who may be different from us.

Segregation has proven to be a failure in the past, and there is no evidence that it will ever benefit anyone in the future.

I understand that these floors were developed to be more sympathetic to students' needs, but they can only prove to be counterproductive.

What students need is an opportunity to be exposed to diversity through open experiences with various parts of the student body.

These floors may facilitate the ease in which similar people can participate in mutually-rewarding activities, but other considerations must be kept in mind.

By segregating those students that want to be or already are "socially aware," we are decreasing the opportunity for all students to expand their views by placing them with others who share the same views.

A day does not go by without "diversity" being mentioned in the same sentence as UMass.

If the overwhelming concern is to teach students to open their minds to new experiences and people, why, then, does Housing Services promote such obvious segregation and close-mindedness to the students?

New leader moves too far

When most people hear of Latin America, they tend to think of four countries: Colombia, Nicaragua, Salvador and Panama. That picture may well change this year to include the Andean country of Peru, adding the republic to nations with active U.S. involvement.

Sam Coleman

The reason is three-fold: 1) The election of a popular writer to the Peruvian presidency 2) The increasing involvement of the administration to drug eradication, and 3) The growing Marxist guerilla war that exacerbates the problem of a nation in the grips of economic collapse.

These conditions came to a head this month with the election of Mario Vargas Llosa, one of the most respected novelists in Latin America and leader of the fredemo political faction in Peru.

Once a follower of the Cuban revolution's doctrines, Vargas Llosa now ferments a far-right position to government.

"He wants to take away free education," complained one peasant to this writer. Indeed, Vargas Llosa has promised to privatize education, banks, medicine and other government-owned industries.

To a people who live with 3,000 percent inflation annually, any change is better. Still, uneasiness is felt when Vargas Llosa promises the nation that Sendero Luminoso rebels will be tried and executed without trial.

The Sendero Luminoso marxists are some of the most destructive guerilla groups operating in the Americas. Though restricted to Peru, they have connections to other Andean nations.

They became a threat when they negotiated fairer prices for coca by the drug lords in Colombia and acquired arms in the deal.

This connection has allowed the Senderos to control the Highland and Amazon regions of Peru and slowly mount attacks on the coastal regions by disrupting power and transportation.

The government has retaliated to the Sendero threat by killing innocent civilians, mostly peasants, under the guise of the ultra-right-wing group, the Franco front.

In the Ayacucho district it has become outright war, prompting Amnesty International to call it one of the worst areas of conflict in the Americas.

Though Peruvians are eager to see an end to the conflict, they fear a leader who speaks of "necessary casualties" to stem the problem and envision tragedies, such as the Argentinean dirty war, occurring.

The promise of better living conditions motivates campesinos to lean towards the Sendero position. Unless the government addresses this economic crisis correctly, the situation will become critical, encouraging U.S. military involvement.

But a woman on the streets of Cajamarca explained it to me best when she quoted a recent story, in which a London couple were found smuggling cocaine in the body of a dead child — a child they had purchased on the streets of Lima:

"You Norte-Americano will do anything for our coca and then you turn around and say it is our fault. Do you blame your liquor or automobile producers for traffic deaths? You need to stop your problem at home, not here."

Whether U.S. policy follows her advice remains to be seen.

An endless struggle for survival

The Nazis, who slaughtered one third of the world Jewish population, were not the first nor the last murderers to "get rid of" Jews. They were simply the most efficient.

The European continent has bathed in Jewish blood for centuries, rinsing itself with such lies as: Jews are satanic, Jews spread disease, the world economy and media are controlled by Jews AND — their all-time favorite — Jews flavor their Passover matzah with the blood of Christian babies.

Europe gave us the ghetto, the Spanish Inquisition, the Holy Crusades, the Czars and the Cossacks, the pogroms and the concentration camp.

Before the Europeans, Jews faced the daggers of the Babylonians, the Persians, the Greeks and the Romans. When it comes to murdering Jews, the great civilizations take turns.

It is futile to try to summarize 3,000 years (and counting) of Jewish oppression in a shabby 60-line space. But there is no need because history's theme is explicitly clear:

The world loves dead Jews.

Today, Nazis are treated like they provided a service to humanity. Kurt Waldheim, an ex-Nazi officer responsible for executing Greek Jews and Yugoslavian partisans, was elected to the Austrian presidency in 1986 because of his war record. A year earlier in Bitburg, West Germany, U.S. President Ronald Reagan placed flowers on the graves of concentration camp guards.

In 1945, after Hitler's troops ditched Poland, some of the locals decided to continue killing Jews without the Nazi infrastructure.

Not much has changed.

On Rosh Hashana and Yom Kippur, Judaism's "High Holy Days," Jewish synagogues in Europe have armed guards next to the prayerbooks. An incident like the 1985 Neve Shalom bombing in Instanbul — 21 Jews died praying — upsets too many tourists.

Darren Garnick

Russian nationalist groups now celebrate Gorbachev's "openness" with promises of organizing mass violence against Jews. Pamyat, one of the more "dedicated" anti-Jewish groups, has scheduled a nationwide beating for May 5.

Thousands of Soviet Jews are now fleeing to Israel for safety. But they face one major obstacle: the Islamic Jihad, a fundamentalist Palestinian terrorist group, has repeatedly threatened to blow up planes carrying them to Tel Aviv.

No one cares.

Recently, Iraqi dictator Suddam Hussein threatened to wipe out half of Israel with poison gas. Iraq has already had practice with their chemical weapons on Iran and their own minority population, the Kurds.

If a foreign power somehow destroyed Israel, killing her three million Jews in the process, the world would just watch. Just like it did in the late 70s while Pol Pot's Khmer Rouge quietly eliminated one million Cambodians.

The U.S. State Department would release a statement of "deep regret" and the American public would get sick of hearing about the "poor Jews" after reading a few newspaper articles.

When it comes to survival, Jews can only depend on themselves. History dictates that we can trust no one else. With all her problems, Israel is THE ONLY HOPE for Judaism to live on.

In James Michener's The Source, a novel which spans from Israel's pre-Biblical days to the present, an elderly Israeli observed that Jews are perfectly capable of defending themselves — provided that they have a piece of land on which to stand:

"For two thousand years whenever we Jews saw a soldier, it could only mean bad news. Because the soldier couldn't be Jewish. He had to be an enemy. It is no small thing to see a Jewish soldier, standing on his own soil, protecting Jews . . . not persecuting them."

This week is Holocaust Memorial Week. On this occasion, the Jewish people do not need nor want false gestures of world sympathy. We just want to live.

day, bringing two nuclear-capable states, Pakistan and India, near conflict.

"In the last year, the fears of the Kashmiri people have been aroused by certain Indian parties that denounce Article 370, as well as demographic change and loss of property rights," Rehman said. "The world current for self-determination must reach Kashmir."

"Kashmir has plunged India and Pakistan into three inconclusive wars and diverted funds into defense, not development," he said. "A solution must be found that will not let bitterness and rancor persist."

"There is a total breakdown of administration in Kashmir," he said. "It is a popular uprising, and India has no one left to talk to. This is a crisis that is even worse than Punjab."

Suman Chattopadhyay, chief correspondent of the Calcutta-based Ananda Bazar Patrika, described the current realities in Punjab as confused, and said that Simranjit Mann, a militant leader, enjoyed widespread popularity.

"Punjab is back to square one," he said. "Violent deaths increased by 400 percent in January, 250 percent in February and 500 percent in March. There is a clear increase in militancy. Gurdwaras are in the hands of militants, Khalsa Panchyats have been established, and in some areas they collect land revenue."

"The recent Indian decision not to hold elections [for Punjab's provincial government] is wrong," Chattopadhyay said. "The same mistake was made when elections in Kashmir were rigged to exclude the Muslim United Front."

Swapan Adnan, a Dacca (Bangladesh) University economist, said the military dictatorship of Bangladesh had an adverse effect on development.

"The current regime has moved from direct repression to distributing largesse extracted from foreign donors to buy off the political opposition," he said. "Religious fundamentalism in the form of Islamic theocratic parties is rising. A new moral order is popular with the peasantry."

"Democracy depends on a balance between elements like students, union leaders, and the army," he said. "Foreign donors and regional powers like India, Pakistan and China can influence this process."

Adnan said: "Much of the aid money is in long term loans, and is wasted. The liabilities of totalitarian greed are being thrust on unborn babies."

Speaker compares AIDS to Holocaust

By JULIA SEREBRINSKY
Collegian Correspondent

The perilous situation of homosexuals and AIDS victims in America is analogous to that which the Jews faced during the years of the Holocaust, said Larry Kramer, cofounder of the AIDS Coalition to Unleash Power.

Kramer, who spoke to a supportive audience at Amherst College Monday, charged the Reagan and Bush administrations with intentionally ignoring the AIDS issue. The bureaucrats under both presidents have acted "like Hitler's henchmen" who are "doing or not doing what superiors are instructing."

"Intentional genocide is going on," he said. "Just as the world sat by as millions of Jews were murdered, they sit back while gays and others are on their way to being murdered."

Kramer said that "Reagan and Bush operate in an absolute power like Hitler," and put "cowards and bigots, not smart people" in charge of the public health services.

"Bush is the second president in a row pretending that AIDS isn't here and refuses to place anybody with brains in charge," he said. "In a time of plague there is only sporadic research conducted mostly by second rate scientists."

The Bush administration has been ineffective in solving the AIDS epidemic, Kramer said. Little is being done because "the Secretary of Health and Human Services [Louis] Sullivan is not a free man. He is a man in prison," surrounded by the conservative staffers appointed by Bush, he said.

Kramer added that the $1 billion of federal funds appropriated for AIDS research is "a billion dollars pissed down the toilet."

Another factor hampering the AIDS research is that it is still thought of as a gay disease, Kramer said. Gays, according to Kramer, are the "officially sanctioned scapegoats."

"AIDS is a metaphor for hate," he said. "Hate of the ruling class for minorities [gays, prostitutes]. "The mixed salad of people, instead of being heralded as members of the melting pot are relegated as the expandable minority."

Kramer pointed out that an increasing number of heterosexuals are being infected with the AIDS virus. Citing the statistics, Kramer said that the number of heterosexual women infected with the virus has risen from three percent to seven percent in New York alone.

In a somber tone, Kramer said that there is one AIDS death every 12 minutes and that every four of every 1,000 college students carry the AIDS virus.

"World has lost a war against AIDS," he said. "Life is very terrifying for many people. No one is safe now. No one who has had sex in the last 10 to 15 years."

Kramer concluded the lecture by calling homosexuals and AIDS victims to power. "Our collective voices are our power," he said. "I don't know what it takes to rouse to this fight, the most important fight in the world today."

According to Sarkisian, the young boys were later hidden by a sympathetic Turkish family, giving them time to escape.

"If my grandfather and his brothers hadn't escaped in 1915 and come to America, I would not be here," he said.

"The atrocities the Turks perpetrated were horrendous," Sarkisian said. "The [methods of] torture they used are unheard of to this day."

Suzie Saroukhanian, a junior nutrition major, said her grandparents were from Van, a town near the Turkey-Iran border. She said Van was one of the only armed Armenian villages able to defend themselves against the Turks. Since her family had weapons, they were able to escape to Iran, Saroukhanian said.

The Turkish government officially denies the Armenian genocide ever happened, a sticky point in U.S.-Turkey relations. Sarkisian said although Presidents Ronald Reagan and George Bush made campaign promises to put pressure on Turkey to acknowledge their past, both presidents refused to do so once in office. The United States is afraid to offend Turkey and jeopardize military bases there, he said.

Claudia Muradian, another member of the club, said she is disgusted that Turkey has dismissed her people's genocide as a fabricated lie.

"America saw it, all of Europe saw it and the world saw it," she said. "Turkey is calling the victims liars."

"It is an ongoing battle to prove my own identity," Sarkisian added. "It's ludicrous. It's history and it happened, yet we have to prove ourselves."

The Zoryan Institute, an Armenian-American education group, has been compiling videotaped testimony of survivors of the Armenian genocide to counteract Turkey's version of history, he said.

Pieces of ceramic shown

By DAVE COUSINEAU
Collegian Correspondent

I am by no means an educated art critic. The "cosmic black french fry" baffles me as much as it probably does you. Why then, did I just spend almost two hours at a sculpture show, staring at various artworks with odd titles such as "Earthrocker" and "Dragon Under Siege?"

I went because I had to, but I stayed because I wanted to.

"Pieces of Mind," a wonderful group show by members of an advanced ceramics class, is being displayed at Wheeler Gallery until April 29. The most notable thing about the show is its variety. Each of the seven artists has a distinct individual style which promises something new and surprising around every corner.

There are simple, practical works like Heather Shadron's bowls and wall hangings, and Kevin O'Neil's ceramic drum called "Jah" (as in Jah mon). Along with them are fanciful pieces like Kathy Chase's "Creature Comforts?", an intricate system of white tubes with several brightly colored gremlins scampering in and out of them, and the two-foot-long "Dragon Teapot" by Kevin Laurin, with the tail as a handle and the mouth as a spout.

Laurin prefers to make functional pieces as opposed to decorative ones. His other entry into the show, a wall hanging which depicts a dragon in what he called Picasso's "cubism" style, also doubles as a serving tray.

"I like to make it so you can use it," Laurin said.

On the opposite end of the spectrum, the works of Virginia Bailey Brown could not be called anything but decorative. Her giant cactus-like sculptures called "Metamorphosis (I and II)," dominates two corners of the room. Sprouting from the knobby green bases are various plant forms and animal heads which the artist had no clear explanation for, though she did say her work is somewhat autobiographical.

"It goes through changes," she said, "but at least it exists."

Cheryl Wolffe said her piece called "Wall Shard" could also be considered autobiographical in that it was humorous and whimsical, but felt that just about everyone could relate to it. It is just what its title implies — a chunk of a bathroom wall — complete with toilet paper holder, electrical wires, graffiti, and even a ceramic mouse crawling behind the chipped plaster.

Some of the pieces have a fascinating sparkling quality which give them the appearance of having silver or gold mixed into the clay. Artist Kent Bois explained that his effect was achieved via the Oriental technique know as "Raku." In this process, Bois said, the sculpted piece is coated with a metal based glaze and fired at a temperature of 1800 degrees. It is removed from the kiln "red hot" and placed in a can full of sawdust. The heat causes the sawdust to combust and this removes the exides from the glaze, producing the beautiful shimmer evidenced in both Bois' and Shadron's work.

For those who enjoy art for more than just its aesthetic value, there are works with an underlying message as well. A noteworthy examples of this is "Small World" by Kathy Chase, an image of a skeleton sitting in the bottom half of a bisected globe, which is lined with a white, silky cloth.

'Henry': a killer movie

By GEORGE LENTZ
Collegian Staff

Shocking in its ferocious nature, Jim MacNaughton's Henry: Portrait of a Serial Killer remained underground for the last four years until it played a three-week run in January at Boston's Nickelodeon Theater. Then it quietly left town.

THE SCREENING ROOM

Suddenly, Henry is in the spotlight, appearing in Newsweek and Time magazines two weeks ago amidst the controversy surrounding its "adults only" label and graphic violence. Henry may be violent, but its graphic nature is no less disturbing than the latest Friday the 13th. The distinction lies not in the actual display of the violence but in the style of composition — how the images are displayed. In this respect, Henry most assuredly deserves the attention it's getting — this is not a pretty movie.

The Freddie and Jason films have managed to avoid the censors because of their campy style and underlying dark humor: their violence, supposedly, is not to be taken seriously. But the composition of MacNaughton's images is so real it landed the film with the industry's kiss of death — an "X" rating. After a four year battle to have the "X" removed, Henry's producers managed to get the film distributed with an "adults only" label.

The film doesn't concern itself with well-crafted narrative; we merely follow Henry cross-country on a murderous rampage. The film is more of an exercise on voyeurism, particularly the innate human fascination with viewing violence from a distance. MacNaughton's realistic images tempt the same fascinations we have when passing an accident scene on a highway — we're horrified, yet compelled to see what's happened.

MacNaughton knows how to build up credible fear and horror by intercutting scenes of Henry (played with soulless conviction by Michael Rooker) driving along in his car with shots of his slain victims, as the soundtrack wails with their death screams. The effect is chilling, revealing MacNaughton's masterful blend of visual and audio imagery to create a horrifying portrait of human behavior.

Feelies cancel, concert still on

The Union Program Council has announced that the Feelies will not be performing in the Bluewall this Friday as previously scheduled, due to the illness of singer/guitarist Bill Million. However, the concert will still take place.

Singer/songwriter Jules Shear will be the headlining act. Shear, a long time praised and respected artist, gained recognition as a songwriter following Cyndi Lauper's successful cover of "All Through the Night" in 1984, and the Bangles top 30 hit with "If She Knew What She Wants" in 1986.

Also appearing will be local favorites Minibus Sandwitch and Free Press.

DIVISION OF CONTINUING EDUCATION

It's a good play, Charlie Brown

By JOSH GALITSKY
Collegian Staff

Happiness is...

Seems an impossible blank to fill in during this day and age, but the University Players claim to have a surefire remedy for beating the bummertime blues, as You're a Good Man Charlie Brown hops, skips, and jumps its way to the stage this week.

From the look of the color-splashed, melodious rehearsals, the name of the tune seems to be F-U-N . . . fun. The cast is having the time of their lives and they are eager and ecstatic to spread their jubilance to a live audience.

Ellen Foley, president of the Players and the brutally confident Lucy in the production said, "We want to give the audience a night to get away from the end of semester pressure. A chance to remember the past and bring people back to their childhood. Just a fun night out. We don't want people to try and figure it out."

Lisa Eidlin, the director, shouts firmly to the cast to "get in your happiness positions," as musical director Erik Jones vigorously commands Snoopy (Lisa McPeck) that, "Your woofs need to be louder." These meticulous demands, accompanied by lots of laughter, Snooped-up silliness, and dogged determination are the makings of some productive, crazy rehearsals.

"The key to the show," Jones insists, "is that the cast is a tight ensemble. There is no stealing of spotlights. We are all in it together."

According to Foley, the cast threw in their recipes for success and picked from the pot what they liked. The production, which coincides with the Peanuts 40th Anniversary, is a blending of bits from the Broadway musical Snoopy and the Charlie Brown cartoons. Throw in a dash of new characters, a pinch of new jokes, and a sprinkling of new music and you have a rather uniquely flavored original.

Jones claims that this show will be, "more fun to rehearse, to perform, and especially to see. It will be an absolute joy to watch."

The message of Joe Mulligan (Woodstock) seems to echo the sentiments of the rest of the cast. He said, "I want the audience leaving feeling that you're never to old to play. You can always run around outside with no shoes on."

You're a Good Man Charlie Brown will be performed April 24-26, in the S.U.B. at 8 p.m. Tickets are $3 for students and $5 for general public. Tickets are available with Tix Unlimited and at the door.

Muses added to pond concert

UPC has announced that Throwing Muses have been added to this year's pond concert that will take place on Sunday, May 6.

Other acts that have already been confirmed are reggae band Ziggy Marley and the Melody Makers, alternative favorites Violent Femmes, and Hearts and Minds. One more band, possibly a rap act, will be added to the bill.

Throwing Muses are a Boston-based band whose innovative, dreamy sound was introduced to many with the release of Hunkpapa, their third major label release, which spawned the single "Dizzy."

UPC is currently looking for people to work the spring concert. This gives people opportunities to see what goes into putting a concert together. Concert workers also receive free t-shirts. Those interested may call the UPC office at 545-2892.

$118 roundtrip airfares on Northwest Airlines.
It's not just a great price.
It's a great experience.

Only for student American Express® Cardmembers.

Apply for the American Express® Card. Then get ready to take off. In search of adventure, action–or just simply to escape.

American Express and Northwest Airlines have arranged these extraordinary travel privileges on Northwest–exclusively for student Cardmembers:

- CERTIFICATES VALID FOR THE PURCHASE OF TWO $118 ROUNDTRIP TICKETS—to many of the more than 180 cities in the 48 contiguous United States served by Northwest. Each certificate is good for a six-month period, and they will arrive within six weeks after you receive the Card. Current Cardmembers will automatically receive their $118 certificates by March 15, 1990 provided they are still full time students.*
- 10% OFF ANY NORTHWEST FLIGHT—with your own personalized discount card, valid through January 1991 on all Northwest and Northwest Airlink flights. (This discount is not applicable to the $118 student certificates and other certificates, promotional or special status airfares.)
- 2,500 BONUS MILES TOWARDS FREE TRAVEL—when you enroll in Northwest's WorldPerks® Free Travel Program.

AND NOW BECOMING A CARDMEMBER IS AS EASY AS A TELEPHONE CALL.

Just pick up the phone, call 1-800-942-AMEX, and talk to us. We'll take your application and begin to process it immediately. (If you have your banking information handy, like your account number and bank address, it will help speed the process.)

Keep in mind that our Automatic Acceptance Program makes it easier for you to become a Cardmember now, as a student, than it will ever be again.

And remember that as a Cardmember you'll enjoy all the exceptional benefits and personal service you would expect from American Express.

So don't miss out on a world of great experiences. Pick up the phone. Apply for the Card. And start packing!

Pieces of Mind

Chase's piece is a circular wall hanging with a row of buildings on one side spitting brown smog across the top, and piles of garbage across the bottom. The top (the sky) is filled with dead and dying birds and the bottom (the sea) is crowded with the bodies of fish. Directly in the center of the dismal ring is a large mirror which jolts the viewer into realizing that he/she is just as responsible for preventing pollution as the next person.

The show is an excellent opportunity for those who have never been to an art show to do so without travelling to an expensive or stuffy museum. The Wheeler Gallery's convenient location and free admission make it easy for anyone to stop in and spend a while looking at some fine work by other UMass students. It can be a surprisingly enjoyable and even relaxing take-in.

The gallery hours are Monday-Thursday, 4-8 p.m. and Sunday 2-5 p.m.

Screening Room

When Henry and his pal Otis get hold of a video camera to tape the murder of an unsuspecting suburban family, MacNaughton uses the actual video footage. It's a brilliantly conceived scene, exploiting the immediacy of the video image to manipulate our perceptions of reality. The grainy, poorly lit quality of the video taped murder is so jolting, we forget it's actually a staged scene.

MacNaughton's hand-held camera movement and lighting never comfort us as an audience, keeping us in a frame of mind reserved for viewing the evening news. It's this "mind-framing" that makes Henry the frightening experience that it is. Henry deserves the attention it's getting; it's as powerful and gut-wrenching a film as you're likely to see and I'm glad MacNaughton had the nerve to make it.

NBA playoff preview: Suns, Jazz get the shaft

By the Associated Press

Their records were good enough to win the Atlantic Division. Unfortunately, the Utah Jazz and the Phoenix Suns aren't in the Atlantic Division.

As a result, one of the Western Conference powers is going to make an early exit from the NBA playoffs.

The Jazz (55-27) meet the Suns (54-28) in the opening round, begininng Friday night at the Salt Palace. It's the first time since the 1974 Detroit-Chicago series that two teams with more than 50 victories have met in the opening round.

Although Phoenix was 3-1 against Utah this season, the Jazz will have the homecourt advantage in the best-of-five series because they had a better overall record.

The playoffs open tomorrow with Indiana at Detroit, New York at Boston, Cleveland at Philadelphia, Denver at San Antonio and Dallas at Portland.

On Friday, it's Phoenix at Utah, Milwaukee at Chicago and Houston at the Los Angeles Lakers.

Eastern Conference

Detroit-Indiana: The defending champion Pistons won the Central Division and had the league's second-best record, but they lost eight of their last 16 games.

Indiana finished only two games above .500, barely made the playoffs and lost four of five games against Detroit. But Pacers coach Dick Versace remains confident.

Boston-New York: The Celtics surged at the end of the season, winning nine of their last 10 games.

The Knicks, who were 1-4 against Boston this season, enter the playoffs in a slump. They lost their last three games and 21 of their last 33.

Philadelphia-Cleveland: The 76ers won their first Atlantic Division title since 1983, but Cleveland is a dangerous opponent. The Cavaliers are healthy and hot, having won six in a row and 17 of their last 23.

The 76ers, who split four games with the Cavaliers, played without Charles Barkley in their regular-season finale — a 118-98 home loss to Boston. But Barkley, who served a one-game suspension for fighting, will be back for the Cleveland series.

Chicago-Milwaukee: Chicago finished second in the Central, four games behind Detroit but 11 games ahead of third-place Milwaukee. The Bulls won their season series against the Bucks, 4-1.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES((March 21-April 19): You will gain nothing by cutting corners in business. Think about joining a gym or engaging the services of a health professional. You meet a prospective romantic partner in a most likely place.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20): A romantic relationship could come under close scrutiny by your friends or relatives. Tell them to back off. Work goes well if you focus on one project at a time. Make essential home repairs.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20): An exciting new business cycle begins today. Certain claims and stories seem farfetched. Conduct your own investigation. Your lighthearted wit cheers others. Be a good guest.

CANCER(June 21-July 22): Those who have a special talent should develop it. Today's ideas can become tomorrow's realities. A relationship will take a fascinating new direction. Passions run high in financial matters. Be calm.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22): A unique business experience will open your eyes. Use your insights wisely and tie up loose ends. Forge an alliance with an understanding member of the opposite sex. Celebrate quietly tonight.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22): A strong-willed person attempts to influence you; resist if certain that you are in the right. Younger family members should take on new responsibilities. Resume a promising romantic relationship.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22): Something you discover today will stand you in good stead when negotiating an agreement in the near future. Do your homework diligently. Seize a golden opportunity to cement a special attachment.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21): Tuck away well-intentioned advice offered by a sibling for future consideration. A blind date or lucky introduction could lead to a lasting romance. Do not be afraid to show your sentimental side.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21): You tend to be lax about shepherding pet projects to completion. Curb an inclination to splurge on luxuries. A promise must be kept even if there is a steep price to pay.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19): It might be better to rely on public transportation than to drive your own car today. Both higher-ups and subordinates are willing to cover up a goof. Apologize for any inconvenience.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18): A legal matter may be settled out of court in your favor. Job pressures ease when you get better organized. Economize in small and big ways if you want to take that dream vacation.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20): Be wary when a romantic partner advises you on your money. Do not neglect minor health concerns. Seniors can reap rich personal rewards from working on community projects.

NBA playoffs

Western Conference

LA Lakers-Houston: The Lakers had the league's best record (63-19), while the Rockets squeezed into the playoffs on the final day of the season.

"The only thing I can say about this Rocket team is God must be smiling on us," coach Don Chaney said after Houston beat Utah, 100-88 Sunday to earn the final playoff berth in the Western Conference.

"We keep screwing it up, but this time we got the job done. Our guys really reacted well under pressure. You wouldn't believed how relieved I am."

The Lakers, who split four games with Houston this season, haven't lost an opening-round series since 1981 — when the Rockets beat them.

San Antonio-Denver: Rookie David Robinson helped the Spurs win the Midwest with a 56-26 record and set the NBA mark for one-year improvement.

The Nuggets, 1-3 against the Spurs this season, finished fourth in the Midwest, 13 games behind San Antonio.

Portland-Dallas: The Trail Blazers won eight of their last nine games and broke the franchise record for victories with 59, but they'll have to overcome a poor playoff history. Since winning the NBA championship in 1977, Portland has lost nine of 11 opening-round tries.

"This is a different team and a different situation," Portland coach Rick Adelman said. "Everybody is going to talk about it, but I don't think it even enters into this picture."

The Mavericks won their last four games and finished third in the Midwest with a 47-35 record, but they were 0-4 against Portland.

baseball

Dan Biagini's sacrifice fly, the Minutemen cut the lead to 7-6, but they would get no closer.

Stefanik hit his second blast of the game in the ninth off of Rob Graziano to make it 8-6. Graziano looked sharp, allowing just two hits in 2 2-3 innings of work. But the squad could not pull the win out for him and as a result Corriveau suffered his fourth loss of the year.

"We play Hartford next, they kicked our butt before, [15-6] if we play like this, we can kiss the playoffs goodbye," Stone said.

Three wins against Temple this weekend clinches a playoff berth, but like Stone says, if the Minutemen play like yesterday, the playoffs will be short lasting.

Minutewomen, Devils split

By DAN SARAZEN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts softball team traveled to Central Connecticut yesterday to take on the Blue Devils and ended up splitting the doubleheader, losing the first game 4-2, and bouncing back to whip Central Conn. in the second 10-2.

It is very possible that the Minutewomen took the Blue Devils lightly and paid the price for it in the first game. UMass got on the board in the first inning as Holly Aprile was hit by a pitch, sacrificed over to second by Cherie DellAnno and scored on a single to deep center field by Jen Miller.

The Minutewomen would score their only other run of the game in the 3rd as Miller walked and scored on a double by Sheri Kuchinskas.

Jeanne Villegas, who leads Central Connecticut in every imaginable offensive category, singled to start the inning and then stole second. Terrie Peck scored Velligas with a single and the UMass lead was cut to one, 2-1.

The Blue Devils tied-up the game on a homer by Velligas in the fifth.

In the sixth Lisa Turonis singled to lead off. Turonis was safe as the Minutewomen attempted for the force at second on a ground ball and then was sacrificed to third. The next two batters walked to load the bases for Marci Hansen who promptly singled to score the winning run.

UMass came back with a vengeance in the second game.

Aprile and DellAnno singled to lead off the game and Chris Collins would lace a single to score Aprile, Moving DellAnno to third. Miller hit a grounder and the Blue Devils attempted to get DellAnno at home, they failed and Miller was safe at first. Collins would score on a single by Stacey Nichols and the Minutewomen had a 3-0 lead.

UMass scored three in the sixth on a walk to Mary Duff, who was sacrificed to second by Darlene Claffey and moved over to third on Amy Cockley's single. Aprile doubled to score Duff. DellAnno walked and Collins reached on an error to load the bases. Miller then scored Aprile and DellAnno with a single.

UMass scored two in the seventh as Stacey Nichols doubled to lead off and went to third on a wild pitch. She would score on a single by Donna Koczajowski who herself would score on a single by Beth Fulcher.

When a team commits six errors in baseball, they usually lose the game. Central Connecticut made six errors and beat the University of Massachusetts, 8-6 yesterday.

When you are the No. 2 team in New England like Central Connecticut is, you sometimes get away with sloppy fielding. The Blue Devils made up for their horrendous fielding by pounding out 11 hits. Central Connecticut was aided by three UMass errors.

"We had our chances [to win] but we stunk the joint up defensively," said UMass coach Mike Stone. "We could have won, we didn't deserve to win, but we could have won."

The Blue Devils took the early lead by scoring a run in the first off of UMass starter Daryle Corriveau. Corriveau received no defensive support, and as a result, Central Connecticut scored four unearned runs.

The Blue Devils went ahead 3-0 when Glenn DiSarcina botched a routine grounder that allowed the inning to continue. Brian Massey took advantage of DiSarcina's error by slamming a single which scored Trevor Loomis and Mike (2-for-3) Sciortino. Sciortino continued his assault on the .500 mark, he is currently hitting .475.

Trailing 3-0, the Minutemen rallied to score three runs in the third. Two Central Connecticut throwing errors led to Brian Bright's base hit which scored Dan Biagini (walk) and Mike Tobin. Drew Comeau lined a single to center which crossed Steve Corradi to tie the game 3-3.

In the fourth, Bob Stefanik, hit his first of two homers in the game. Stefanik, the number nine batter in the lineup is not your every day number nine hitter. On the season, the sophomore is hitting .411 with a team leading six homers, and 11 stolen bases.

The Blue Devils connected off of Corriveau for one more run in the fifth and two more in the sixth before Stone lifted him in favor of Jeff Toothaker. Although Corriveau did not pitch badly, he was unable to match his previous performances against BU (an 8-0 shutout) and Holy Cross (a 14-3 win). Corriveau hurt himself by walking five, and it seemed as if he was always trying to work himself out of a jam.

Toothaker came in the middle of the sixth and proceeded to throw 10 straight balls, leading to two Blue Devil runs. Toothaker was not charged with any runs, but the fact is, he was unable to stop the runners he inherited from scoring.

In the stretch half of the seventh inning, Drew Comeau smashed a homer over the left field wall (his third) to cut the lead to 7-5. Comeau led UMass with three hits (no doubles).

When Derek Dana singled, and scored on

Gorillas look for big win vs. Harvard

Vinny D'Angelo and the Gorillas face off against No. 6 Harvard today at 3 p.m. at The Hill.

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

No need to be choosy. They're all important now.

The stretch drive is beginning for the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team, with only four (five, if Brown ever makes up its mind to reschedule the April 7 rainout – don't bet the kids on it) games left on the docket.

Though the Gorillas are 7-2 and winners of two in a row, it's clear that a big 'W' is needed against a highly-ranked team in order for them to thrust themselves prominently into the playoff picture.

Hello, Harvard.

The Crimson come to The Hill this afternoon (3 p.m.) as the sixth-ranked team in the nation, third in New England, with an 8-1 record. Aside from the fact that a win over the Crimson would be a huge boost for the playoff hopes, this is an Ivy League school (everyone loves to beat them, right?). Better yet, it's Harvard (and everyone really loves to beat them).

But only one team has been able to do that – Brown, last Wednesday in a 21-16 slugfest. The problem is that nobody seems to know which Harvard team is going to show up on a given day. The Crimson beat Army in overtime, 7-6 (did they play 15-minute quarters in that one?).

"They're a tough team to figure out," said UMass coach Dick Garber. "They'll probably try to play a slowdown game."

But know this. Just like UMass would like to beat its Cambridge rivals, Harvard would prefer nothing more than to take a kick at the state school.

The Crimson bring a veteran team to town, paced by seniors David Kramer, Perry Dodge and Mark Donovan, and junior Mick Cavuoti.

Kramer has been lighting it up this year, scoring 37 goals in nine games. The fact that he has only five assists means one thing – this guy likes to finish it off.

"He's the shooter," Garber said.

Cavuoti, on the other hand, has a team-high 18 assists, but he's the only one on the team with more than six.

"Cavuoti's having a helluva year," Garber said.

In last season's meeting in Cambridge, Garber countered Cavuoti's playmaking ability with defender Ricky Mullins. A freshman at the time, Mullins had Cavuoti for lunch and the Gorillas rolled to a 12-4 win. Garber will be looking for the same type of performance today.

Random stuff: Men's hoop giving thanks to their fans

To all those hoop maniacs who gave their all to spur the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team to the Atlantic 10 championship game and a bid in the National Invitation Tournament – now it's time for your reward.

The UMass Court Club has made available a limited numbers of tickets for Sunday's men's basketball banquet. Any student who wishes can purchase a $6 ticket today or tomorrow in the basketball office.

The banquet will be held in the Student Union Ballroom at 5:30 p.m. The featured speaker will be former UMass player and current Kentucky coach Rick Pitino.

"This is our chance to thank the students for what they've done this year," UMass coach John Calipari said.

Jim Clark

"The guys who painted their faces and put basketballs on their heads and showed their support all season.

"We were 8-1 at home [in the A-10] this season, with our only loss being in triple overtime to Temple," Calipari said. "[The Curry Hicks Cage] was the toughest place to play in the conference, and the fans were the reason for that."

* * *

Another reason for the success of the Minutemen this season was senior point guard Cary Herer. As a result, Herer was named to the Jewish All-American team. He was one of three New England players to be named to the team, along with Connecticut's Nadav Henefeld and Lior Arditti of Boston College.

* * *

It's not a rare occurrence for a UMass team (men's lax, field hockey, women's soccer) to make the NCAAs. But a pair of UMass athletes got their chance to shine as individuals in the big show this past weekend.

Freshman Tammy Marshall and sophomore Cal Booker each competed in the NCAA gymnastics championships this weekend and placed well in their individual events. Booker was eighth in the vault competition at Minneapolis, while Marshall was 11th, also in the vault, at Oregon State University.

* * *

It's hurts all of us to even have to think about this. But tomorrow may be the last game in quite a while for the women's lacrosse team.

UMass has already played its last game at Totman Field, but here's hoping the Gazelles can knock off Dartmouth in Hanover, N.H. and go out with a flourish.

In keeping up with former UMass athletes, shortstop Gary DiSarcina was assigned to Triple-A Edmonton after spending spring training with the California Angels.

He is one of nine former UM baseball players in pro ball. At last check, Steve Allen (Texas Rangers) was in Double-A, and Don Strange (Atlanta Braves) and Brian Conroy (Lynchburg, Boston Red Sox) were in Single-A. Conroy pitched a three-hit shutout in his first start of the year.

As for the others (Dean Borelli, Mike Owens, Ken Greer, Dave Telgheder and Paul Ciaglo), we'll keep checking.

Final thought while in the middle of the diamond: With 19 freshmen and sophomores (including all but two of the pitchers), we'll be hearing from the Minutemen in a couple of years if the draft doesn't leave the cupboard bare.

GEO pressures administration

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
Collegian Staff

Some 125 members of the Graduate Employee Organization demonstrated at Chancellor Duffey's campus house and at the Whitmore Administration building yesterday to maintain pressure on administrators while negotiations continue over a union election.

Waving placards and chanting "Joe, Joe get off your derriere, we want an election fast and fair," the crowd marched at 7:30 a.m. from the Student Union to confront Duffey at his campus home between the Orchard Hill and Central Residential Areas.

Duffey did not come to the door. Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Dennis L. Madson said he believed that Duffey had already left for the day.

For the past three days, the GEO has stalled threats to stage a human blockade of the Whitmore Administration building, opting instead to continue talks with campus administrators.

Provost O'Brien said yesterday there has been 'tremendous progress' in negotiations with the GEO, but the administration has affirmed that talks will completely break down if a blockade occurs.

"If you look over the last few weeks — or even the last several months — we have together solved much bigger problems," O'Brien said. "I can't imagine either of us gagging over the small problems at hand now."

UMass police remained alert to any sign of a blockade yesterday, closing the building to the public until 9 a.m. Each of the three entrances were protected by at least two police officers.

GEO leaders say a blockade of the building by the GEO is now unlikely. "We don't want to give them an excuse to break off negotiations," said Marc Kenen, GEO negotiating committee member. The two parties are attempting to reach accord on the planning of an election to determine who will represent graduate student employees.

Graduate student Mike Fuller led chants yesterday during the GEO protest in front of the Whitmore administration building

Renee Heberle, GEO spokeswoman and negotiating committee member, said negotiators are grappling with three major differences.

The first is that the administration has asked the GEO to sign a 'no strike' clause to insure that they will not strike until after an election is held.

Heberle said if the organization accepted the clause, graduate students' "hands would be tied" because they would not be able to protest changes such as fee increases.

In turn, the GEO has asked the administration to sign a 'neutrality clause,' which would prevent campus administrators from endorsing a particular union during the election.

Duffey said Tuesday that the administration will not remain neutral because of the circumstances surrounding what he called an "extraordinary" election.

"What we are demanding of the administration is that they treat us like other employees," Heberle said. "Traditionally in labor elections, bosses remain neutral because bosses are in a position to ruin the lives of employees, therefore everything they say must be interpreted with an eye on that relationship."

Finally, the GEO is asking the administration to support them in front of the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission, which certifies unions.

If negotiations are unsatisfactory, GEO leaders said the membership would consider voting on whether to withhold the grades of all undergraduates except seniors and transfer students.

Several TAs said, should it be necessary, they will withhold grades to prod the administration into a settlement.

"Teaching — the undergraduate's education — is not going to be withheld, just the grades," said Dan Carter, a TA in the mathematics department. "In the long run this will be best for students at this university."

Vice Chancellor for Research and Graduate Studies Samuel F. Conti, said he hopes undergraduates will not be "jeopordized" by actions that graduate student employees are aimming at administrators.

"I can't see graduate student employees holding undergraduate grades hostage for something outside their hands — in the hands of administrators," he said. "It would be punishing students who have nothing to do with this."

Prof: U.S. blocked Jewish rescue efforts

By CHRIS MUTHER
Collegian Staff

The United States State Department delayed and deliberately blocked efforts to rescue people held in concentration camps during World War II, according to David Wyman, a University of Massachusetts professor of Holocaust history and author of the best selling book Abandonment of the Jews.

Speaking to a crowd of over 80 people in Memorial Hall last night, Wyman said the United States waited over a year to act on information that the German army was performing an extermination of a race. He said the press was also aware of this information but the story was all but ignored.

"There was no help from any group, there was a small group of Christian clergy that spoke up, but overall there was a deafening silence from the Christian community," he said.

In addition to the State Department, he said the British government also ignored the cries of help from European Jews. He said both the United States and England had the opportunity to help 70,000 Jews escape from a concentration camp in Bulgaria, but let them die because they were worried about a large scale immigration.

Congress also delayed efforts to rescue concentration camp victims because of a strong anti-Semitic sentiment in Congress at the time.

"The atmosphere of bigotry was abundant in Congress," Wyman said. "Over 40 percent of the Congressmen at the time were known to be anti-Semitic."

The State Department was blocking efforts from small private groups of Jewish citizens to rescue European Jews, he said, which resulted in "not a policy of rescue, but a policy of fear of immigration and avoidance of rescue."

One way the State Department blocked immigration was by creating difficult immigration procedures, making the process "impossibly difficult" for European Jews to enter the United States and leaving immigration quotas largely unfilled, he said.

"We could allow 60,000 [immigrants] a year at the time, but were running at about 6,000, we could have saved about 180,000 lives," he said.

When the United States began a rescue effort, he said the government only supplied three percent of the funding, forcing private Jewish organizations to raise the rest.

Women 'claim' the night

'Take Back the Night' march set for Friday

By AMY HENRY
Collegian Staff

Women will symbolically "claim" the night Friday empowering themselves and other women by walking through campus without male escorts to mark the first Five College"Take Back the Night" rally and march at the University of Massachusetts.

Stacy Roth, coordinator of the Educator Advocate Program at the Everywoman's Center and an organizer of the event said, "The rally is an important way for women to get together, take back the night and have [the streets] be a safe place with out a male escort."

About twelve women from the Five College area have been working with the Everywoman's Center for nearly seven months to put this rally together, Roth said.

Roth said she expects 500-750 women to participate in Friday's march.

As a culmination to several other events planned for Friday which is UMass Sexual Assault Awareness Day, the march, titled "Power in the Moonlight," will begin with a rally for women on the UMass Student Union steps at 6 p.m.

Some scheduled speakers will include: Janice Raymond, UMass Women's Studies professor; Kathy Alexander, director of the Victim Witness Assistance in Northampton which is a part of the District Attorney's Office that guides victims and witnesses through the legal system; Ann Ferguson, UMass philosophy professor; and Stacy Roth.

Demonstrations by the Valley Women's Martial Arts, presentations in Spanish by assault survivors, a memorial vigil and local singers Katie Tolles, Spontaneous Combustion and Donna Hebert, will be featured at the rally.

After the rally, at approximately 8 p.m. women will light candles and march to Amherst Common where they will meet a men's rally protesting violence against women.

The for-only-men men's rally is from 7 to 9 p.m. in the Red Room, Converse Hall at Amherst College. Steve Botkin, head of the Men's Resource Connection will speak, followed by informal discussion. The event is sponsored by Men against Rape Combating Harassment (MARCH) of Amherst College.

"There is a clear message from the men from MARCH and the Men's Resource Connection that men do have to take an active role in stopping violence against women," Roth said.

Botkin said, it is important for men to not only support women in the "Take Back the Night" action but also for men to realize the role they play in perpetuating violence against women.

There will also be a "speak out" Friday at noon commemorating Sexual Harrassment Day in the Student Union Lobby. A rally for men and women to protest violence against women will be held at Pulaski Park, Northampton on Saturday, at 1 p.m.

UMass grant award to fund new courses

By MICHAEL WEBBER
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts' Department of Accounting and Information Systems received a grant of $93,400 to fund two new courses from the Accounting Education Change Commission recently.

According to Louis Wigdor, director of Communications in the School of Management, UMass was one of five schools chosen from a pool of 40 to receive these Commission grants.

"To be selected from the group of 40 proposals, many of which were excellent, is a real honor for the University of Massachusetts," said Gary L. Sundem, executive director of the commission. "It shows that their accounting faculty has given serious thought to weaknesses in today's accounting programs and has devised innovative ways to address them."

The Commission, composed of a panel of educators and accountants, works to improve accounting education across the country and is funded by major public accounting firms, Wigdor said.

UMass accounting and information systems faculty submitted a proposal to the Commission asking for a new communication course for accounting majors, a survey course on the accounting profession and a new computerized classroom, Wigdor said.

Since the money was granted specifically for the courses, it will not directly offset the effects of the budget cuts, he said.

However, the new courses and equipment will make the School of Management more attractive to students and faculty, Wigdor said, ultimately resulting in new departmental resources.

The communication course will emphasize both oral and written communication skills to help future accountants to organize information strategically, while the survey course will attract new students to the accounting major and encourage graduate study in accounting, Wigdor said.

He said that although the communication course is for accounting majors only, the survey course will be open to all students, including those from the other four colleges. Both courses are expected to be available in the fall of 1991, he said.

Undergrads lack facts, interest in GEO struggle

By KENDRA PRATT
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts undergraduates do not understand Graduate Employees Organization's demand for union recognition and have shown little support because they lack knowledge about the purpose of unions, student leaders said yesterday.

Some 10 undergraduates attended the Graduate Employee Organization's rally to gather support for union recognition Tuesday at the Whitmore Administration Building.

One member of the GEO, who requested anonymity, said undergraduates feel the unionization issue is strictly a graduate students issue.

"Undergraduates feel that they have their own problems," the member said. "They fail to see the direct correlation between the problems of undergraduates and graduates."

Student Trustee-elect Angus McQuilken said although undergraduate student leaders understand the need for the GEO to be unionized, most undergraduates have not taken the time to inform themselves of the issue.

"Undergraduates have never been laborers and don't understand the concept of a labor power," McQuilken said. "I don't think undergraduates understand what a union is for." GEO spokeswoman Elizabeth Kruse said graduate students have felt that undergraduates have been supportive but not knowledgable about the unionization issue.

"People on this campus feel very overburdened by the fiscal problems in this state, but have still supported us," Kruse said.

Although graduate students supported the undergraduate strike last semester, McQuilken said undergraduates have not shown similar support for the GEO's demand for unionization.

"The graduate students came through for us when we were striking last semester," he said. "They put their jobs on the line when we just missed a week of classes."

McQuilken said if undergraduates were asked to walk out of classes in support of the GEO, they probably would not do it.

"The undergraduates are not making a sacrifice themselves or making an effort to educate themselves about what they are fighting for," McQuilken said.

Kruse said she has kept her students informed as negotiations continue. She said graduate students dispelling information to undergraduates during class time has been the most effective way to transfer information about the GEO's negotiating status.

English prof. dicusses autobiographical work

By BETH ANN ALBRO
Collegian Correspondent

Margo Culley, University of Massachusetts English Professor, yesterday spoke at the Women's Studies Brown Bag Lunch Series in the Campus Center to address the topic of "American Women's Life Writing."

Culley, who has taught courses on diaries as literary forms and autobiographies at UMass, told participants while people recall and tell their favorite personal stories, things got lost and added. "How close are these stories to the actual events?" she asked.

While discussing some of the difficulties of writing autobiographies as a literary form, she said, the writer is faced with the struggle of revision. "You can't keep making revisions [to your life story]," she said.

The writer who is revising these memories is not the same person who has recorded the experience. Our storytelling shifts focus because we are always changing, she said.

A long-standing problem with writing autobiographies has been the feeling of "so what," writers feel as though their personal experiences are entirely irrelevant and their story is meaningless, she said.

Culley said inspiring others to tell their life stories is the quality which makes sharing stories so relevant, saying we do not have to write down our life stories if we share them with others.

"Writing life stories is a 'mind game.' You are never yourself," she said. "We are all in the process of constructing ourselves."

She discussed works of women writers such as Zora Neal Hurston and Harriot Jacobs, adding that many critics feel women's autobiographies are fragmented and emphasize community rather than the individual.

"I have not yet seen a satisfactory argument which shows women's autobiographies to be different than men's," she commented.

UMass Women's Studies faculty member, Arlene Avakian shared her experiences in writing her own autobiography. She said when you tell your own story, you make people want to tell their's too.

Culley said she introduced the idea for the course "Man and Woman in Literature."

She is currently teaching "American Women Writers," and will be teaching an undergraduate course in autobiography next fall.

The Women's Studies' Brown Bag Lunch Series is conducted every Wednesday from 12:15 to 1:30 p.m. in Campus Center room 917. Drinks are provided. Next week: Carol Potter lectures on the book Before We Were Born.

SGA filibuster ends

Area government cuts reduced, fees increase

By LISA SHAPIRO
Collegian Staff

Karen Talbot is a very happy treasurer.

After one month of filibuster and protest, two motions were passed last night by the Undergraduate Student Senate which, by cutting trust fund allocations to governing bodies across campus, lessens the burden of cuts to registered student organizations.

A constitutional amendment, passed 50-14, substantially reduces area government allocations of the Student Activities Trust Fund to give each government a base amount of $5,000 plus $1 per fee-paying student. This reduces inevitable cuts to RSOs, many of which represent minority interests on campus.

SGA budget committee proposals for the fiscal year 1991 listed substantial cuts to RSOs. "This is the best possible solution because area governments and the Board of Governors are sitting on some $300,000, much of which is mismanaged and misspent. There is fat to be cut in both places," said Treasurer Karen Talbot.

Talbot said she is working to pass an internal policy that would enable area governments to keep a portion of unspent trust fund money so as to encourage fiscal responsibility. Currently all area governments are required to return all unspent monies to the trust fund at the end of each fiscal year, she said.

Southwest Area Government President Bob Monaghan disagreed with the amendment and said cuts should be made from professional and administrative staff. Talbot said those positions could not be reduced now due to the late date in the fiscal year and reductions will be reviewed this summer for the following year.

The second motion, passed 36-11, reduces trust fund money to the Board of Governors from $7 to $5 per student.

The BOG sponsors weekly comedy shows in addition to other campus events.

Hanging cited in death

Stevaki Lobb, 20, the Amherst College sophomore found dead in his dormitory room Monday night, died of asphyxia due to hanging, Dr. Stephen Adams of the Springfield Medical Examiner's office said yesterday.

Adams would not comment on whether or not the 20-year-old student had committed suicide.

Amherst College President Peter Pouncey expressed sorrow to the college community following the Lobb's death.

"He had done extraordinary things in his short life, and his future was bright with promise," Pouncey said in a statement to the College Tuesday.

Lobb loved writing and language, played the classical guitar, visited people in prison and worked on the newspaper, Pouncey said.

"He and his younger brother were taught mostly by their parents as they traveled to various countries and cultures, in a sailing boat they had built themselves," Pouncey said.

Students have been meeting with members from the Counselling Center since Monday night. The date for a memorial service will be announced shortly, Pouncey said.

Amherst Police ruled out foul play and closed the investigation Tuesday.

Questions for those who favor divestment and sanctions

I have some questions for the protestors at UMass who favor divestment and economic sanctions against South Africa.

First, what is your educational goal at the University? Mine was to forsake the mob and to join the search for truth. It took zero talent or brains to fall into lock-step with ranting demonstrators.

Jay F. Lacklen

Reading accounts of student demonstrations against UMass' alleged investments in South Africa, I suspect that many have forsaken the search for truth and have joined the mob.

This issue has been simplistically drawn as being for or against racism. College is not for simplistics.

How many of you earnest, self-righteous demonstrators have sought out opposing arguments? Are you thoroughly satisfied that your position is correct, or is just feeling righteous and self-important good enough?

If you will put down your placards and unclench your fist for a moment, I will give you a few issues to ponder.

- If the immediate universal suffrage solution you advocate is correct, why has nearly every sub-Saharan African country that has tried it over the past 30 years become an economic basket case?

Your theory has been given abundant chances to prove itself and has resulted in famine, destitution and genocide throughout the continent. Your instant democracy goal has meant one-man, one-vote, one-time. It has unleashed a parade of obscene one-man dictatorships and murderous clowns on the very people you propose to help.

Do you: a) not know this, b) know about it but have a rationalization, c) know about it but don't want to be confused by history?

- You can't defend a cure by describing the disease. You can't defend your solution for South Africa by attacking Apartheid. You wouldn't defend quinine as a cure for malaria by describing malaria. You would cite examples where quinine has cured the malady.

Similarly, you can't defend your proposed political and social solution for South Africa by listing the alleged evils of Apartheid. This criticism is a complaint, it does not prove a solution. You have to show where your solution has worked in practice — except, of course, yours hasn't.

- Using the disease analogy again to highlight economic sanctions, what are sanctions attacking? If you want to cure cancer, you attack the source of the disease, the tumor.

Sanctions imply that business, or South Africa's form of capitalism, is the disease. If sanctions are the radiation treatment for South African ills, I assume they are working on the evil tumor, capitalism, which has apparently encouraged racism. Allow me to answer my own questions.

Africa's failure over the past 30 years is not a Black failure; it is a socialist failure. Black leadership wasn't to blame; socialist leadership was the culprit.

Are you marching to demand that socialism be forced on African Blacks? I thought you were on their side!

Your demonstration leaders can't get beyond bad-mouthing Apartheid because history has shown the inadequacy of their solutions. They can only "slander the disease" because their "cure" is a demonstrable disaster.

Sanctions provide an ingenious method for attacking capitalism without having to defend socialism, and to denigrate capitalism by equating it with racism. What a marvelous, utterly false and despicable argument. Astoundingly, many large American corporations have implicitly endorsed this canard by withdrawing from South Africa.

Sanctions as a symbol — and capitalism as a culprit — have already permeated Black thinking in South Africa. Teenagers are rudely ignoring Nelson Mandela's call for them to stay in school to build a new country. Let the Whites produce the wealth, Blacks will merely vote to seize (nationalize) it. If capitalism is to blame, Blacks need only pillage the capitalists at the ballot box.

There are profound moral, political and economic issues intertwined in the South African situation — if you have the intellectual integrity to search for them.

If you are paying top dollar for education, you should demand to hear the other side of this and other arguments. You are supposedly being educated, not rubber stamped.

Soviet Jews need our help

Over the past several months this country and the world have witnessed a remarkable turn toward freedom in Eastern Europe. Communist parties are being overthrown and many long-overdue personal liberties are finally being granted.

Deborah Zuckerman

One of the side effects of Gorbachev's Glasnost has been the founding and growth of nationalistic movements. These groups can now express their freedom of speech and are allowed to assemble openly, something unheard of just two years ago.

One particular group has established a membership of over one million people, with another two million sympathizers. This group called PAMYAT, is a facist, Neo-Nazi type organization, and has committed many horrible acts against the Soviet Jews.

PAMYAT has been responsible for the desecration of more than 50 Jewish cemeteries.

They have smashed the windows of several synagogues, painting swastikas and such rhetoric as "Jews get out" and "Die Jews" on the walls.

Jews no longer venture onto the streets, knowing that if they are noticed, they will be brutally attacked. Prospective members of PAMYAT must submit the names and addresses of four Jewish families before joining the group.

PAMYAT also distributed leaflets outside of the Moscow House of Culture saying "Comrades! Russian Patriots! How long can we put up with dirty Jews, who have brazenly infiltrated our society? . . . Why do we great, beautiful, wise Slavs see the Yids as normal phenomena? How can those dirty stinking Jews hide and pose as heroes and proud Russians? D.Y. Death to the Yids." (May 8, 1988).

On May 5, 1990, PAMYAT has called for a national program against the Jews, calling on Russians to destroy Jewish shops, and attack, maim and even kill the two million plus Jews in the Soviet Union.

As Americans, we must not sit idly by as another Holocaust takes place. There are still several things that can be done to avoid this tragedy.

First, direct flights must be established from Moscow to Tel Aviv immediately. Although Gorbachev has graciously opened up the emmigration channels, there are still close to 200,000 Jews who have officially requested to leave and over a million more who would leave, given the opportunity.

Even if such flights were established on a 24-hour basis, there is not enough time to evacuate two million people.

Therefore, the United States government must place pressure on Gorbachev to do everything in his power to protect the Jews, condemn all anti-Semitic acts and severely punish anyone who might commit such acts.

Many Americans are completely unaware of the dire situation in the Soviet Union. It is our duty as informed, freedom-loving individuals to spread the word and take immediate action.

Fifty years ago, six million Jews were systematically exterminated in Europe. We must help to make sure that such an event does not reoccur.

We have always been taught the importance of learning our history so as not to be forced to repeat it.

The current situation in the Soviet Union shows the grim reality of that thought all too clearly.

We must keep ourselves abreast of the situation to insure that a Holocaust does not happen again.

It is only our moral duty to humankind.

Racism charge disclaimed

I woke up Monday morning to a phone call from a distraught friend. He was calling about a letter printed in the Collegian entitled "White perpetrators of racism."

My friend, another friend and I are presumed to be the "White racists" in question. We would like Ms. Mimi Bix, as well as all of the members of the community who read the Collegian, to know the facts behind the poster about which she is commenting.

Ms. Bix may have been offended at the poster, but I doubt that she could ever imagine the emotions we have been going through since first discovering the existence of these posters.

We did not write these posters, nor did we put them up. Their presence has caused us a great deal of distress and has disrupted our lives.

What was a matter between the police and the two people involved is now something threatening to escalate out of control. We are vehemently opposed to racism and discrimination in any form and anyone who knows us can testify to this fact.

We will agree with Ms. Bix that, yes, racism does exist and that everything possible should be done to fight these crimes. But in this particular case, racism is not the issue, nor can it possibly be construed as being the issue.

We owe an apology to no one, but rather should get one from the people responsible for defaming our names as well as from the Collegian for printing something as serious a charge as racism without having investigated the facts.

Survivors pass on legacy

I am a grandchild of survivors. My grandmother, the youngest of 11 children, grew up in Lodz, Poland — a large city with a thousand years of Jewish culture in it.

For those thousand years, Jews played key roles, laying foundations for Polish art and industry. My grandmother was barely 14 in 1939; my grandfather, one of seven children, was 16 when the world for them and their families came to an end. Poland told these two teenagers that the Nazis were now in control and were planning to destroy all the Jewish life they could reach.

In other words, them.

Felice Cohen

One day, my grandmother came home from school and saw her parents dragged out into the street. Before her eyes, they were beaten by the Gestapo. She watched as all their furniture and clothing, along with her books, dolls, diary and pictures — all the things we take for granted — were destroyed in a bonfire. Then, her father's business was burned to the ground.

They were among the first Jewish families in town to be targeted. Only months before, my grandmother, who had a lovely singing voice, was chosen to sing the Polish national anthem at a special school ceremony. But now, all her friends and neighbors suddenly had become strangers. No one dared offer to take them in, because if they showed any kindness to a Jew, they would be the next victims.

The Nazis terrorized and destroyed the most basic fabric of Jewish society — all experiences which define a culture torn away, burnt, forbidden.

My grandmother spent the next five years in the Lodz Ghetto — years where she should have been studying and walking with friends on the green hills of a University like this one and growing to adulthood with confidence and trust.

Instead she watched her own father starve to death before her eyes. She was forced to watch as two of her brothers were shot dead by a firing squad. No "hearing," no student demonstrations . . . just dead. I now understand why my own father, a lawyer, cares so much about freedom of speech. And why my mother, the daughter who grew up hearing these stories from her parents, values her family so much.

My grandmother was later transported to Auschwitz. She never saw her mother again. Except for two surviving sisters, everyone else in their family was murdered, brutally and with indifference.

Nazi efficiency, like its famous car engines, was hidden from the world. All through those years, the Third Reich produced death, like car engines. We do not drive Mercedes.

I am a grandchild of survivors and a child of a victim, too. We have no heirlooms for grandchildren to inherit. No ancient family Shabbat candle sticks, for these were long ago melted down. I have never seen a photograph of my European aunts, uncles or cousins — they all perished along with the pictures.

What I have inherited is a legacy of stories. Through those stories, rich in Yiddish society that existed before the war, I can experience that family. I will name my children for them as my mother has.

In a recent conversation with my grandfather, he told me that he had been up most of the night, reliving nightmares of the Nazis trying to take him away — again.

Something that is still alive within so many people cannot be forgotten even after they are gone. They will always be survivors.

The blood they shed for the Nazis is my blood.

Homophobia, pious pontification and a bad P.A. at rally

The "Straight Pride" rally that took place on the Student Union steps at noon Tuesday was quite the event.

What could have been an interesting event of the straight population in the community, forming one voice of pride being who they are, was soured by strong homophobic undertones and the loud, pious pontification of opinions from both sides of the UMass political spectrum.

No one was able to hear anyone speak because of the shitty P.A. system, and eventually the whole thing was cut short due to emerging violence and obvious stupidity.

Being a conscientious journalist, I attempted to cover the rally from the Young Americans for Freedom (Y.A.F.) point of view. After all, they feel as if they are losing their voice in UMass politics, so why not give them the attention they seek?

Anyhow, this entailed positioning myself behind the speakers (no pun intended).

Ted Maravelias ranted and raved about how it is the "responsibility of every nation on this earth to recognize the holy word of the Lord." Naturally, everyone ate it up like candy, although the bi/homosexuals, lesbians and allies who attended (who seemed to outnumber the Y.A.F. crowd) did laugh at him.

Finally, after five or so minutes of complaining about how his money went to the "sinful" organization such as the LBGA, a certain attractive Jonathan Levitt, an RSO member, just had to express his feelings of lust for him and thus gave him a wet one right on the cheek (the one that's found on your face, that is). The crowd went wild. Poor Ted flipped out.

It was at this time that the crowd opposing the event had to be pushed back by the semi-circle of people controlling the emerging "riot." It was also the case when comments started flying from Y.A.F. members and various allies.

Saad Hopkins

Steve Hebert, holding a phallic symbol, came up to me and said, "Look at what the LBGA did to our sign!" — as if to make me feel guilty (as if I care).

"I'm just a Black Jewish, homosexual pursued by every red-neck in Hatfield. I'm not a member of the LBGA so don't complain to me," I said.

After failing to evoke a response, he turned to his pals and complained about the LBGA ripping the Minuteman sign down, carving it into a penis shape and mailing it back to them.

I laughed, and then he turned and spoke about how homosexuality is unacceptable, and how he protests his money being used for supporting things like Awareness Day.

Then there was a woman carrying a Bible who was supporting the "Straight Pride" ideals. Behind her were two other women engaged in putting up a banner reading "Heterosexuality is oppressive to women!"

She was outraged (as I was puzzled) and gave them a tongue lashing. "Heterosexuality is oppressive to women. No! Feminism and lesbians are oppressive to women, because women have a role in society." Why can't we be friends?

Various other comments being tossed around by the Y.A.F. dudes were "America. Love it or leave it!" "Fags! You're all gonna' die of AIDS," "Hey, you guys all take it up the butt!" and "Duh!"

But the two comments that simply weren't funny, were responding to Ben Eder, who spoke on behalf of the LBGA, who was actually supporting "Straight Pride" day, or its original intention anyhow.

After the 911 boys showed up and put an end to it, I went and talked to some cool people from Y.A.F., whose aim in this event was true.

One (unfortunately, whose name escapes me) I even wanted to invite out for a beer. Not to make a pass at him, but because he was being civil, rational and just simply the opposite of Mr. Maravelias.

People like him and I should hook up more often. I accept and support his values, as he does mine, all differences aside. Remember? We learned that in Kindergarten.

As for the flag burners and the fag bashers, keep thinking at the seventh grade level!

Letters to the Editor

Endorsing homosexuality ineffective

I've read entirely too many articles and editorials concerning homophobia lately.

I believe that the majority of people already have formed their opinions on homosexuality by the time they enter college.

If you know a homosexual, chances are you have an opinion on homosexuality, or have at least thought about it before. If you have never met a homosexual before, you may not have an opinion, or at least not a valid one.

My guess is that a small minority of all college students don't think that homosexuality is either normal or abnormal, right or wrong.

How many people's opinions are going to be changed by having Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual Awareness Week, or by having a Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual affairs page in the Collegian?

You may be able to reach and educate the small number of people that don't know or think anything about homosexuality, and you may even be able to change some people's minds, but your crusade to have everyone accept your opinions is hopeless.

If you continue to expose those of us who don't agree with but accept the idea of homosexuality to your posters, articles and other forms of sight pollution, your voice will become very weak. The issue of homosexuality is tossed back and forth so many times that it just won't matter anymore.

It is also possible that continual exposure to gay and lesbian propaganda will increase people's animosity towards the issue.

They will grow weary of hearing about all of your opinions when they already have their own.

I am, as I'm sure most people are, for gay rights. This is because I am for human rights.

I am not homophobic and I do not endorse homosexuality but I accept it. I am just tired of having the issue continually in my classrooms, in my paper, in my building, on my campus.

The issue is not whether or not homosexuality is right or wrong, normal or abnormal, but that it is time for everyone to realize that no matter where you go, or who you are, there will always be somebody who's not going to like you.

I feel the way that I feel, and no matter how many posters I see, and no matter how many articles I read, I'm not going to change my mind.

Individual opinions are based on a lifetime of experiences and cannot be effectively changed by the repetitive vocalization of one group's beliefs.

I think that you should stop devoting so much energy and time to homosexual posters, editorials, articles and even LBG Awareness Weeks, and think of more constructive ways to voice your thoughts and opinions.

Mourning the loss of privilege

These days one cannot walk in this campus without hearing extremely angry rhetoric about colonialism and Western imperialism by a few vocal disgruntled foreign students.

Many of you (American students) wonder, do most foreign students feel the same way, are most of them such extreme radicals that they seem to hate every thing that is Western?

As a foreign student, I have to say a strong "NO."

Many of you may feel puzzled that as much as they resent almost everything about the West, they seem to have a masochistic tendency of suffering from contradictions, and not returning to their beloved homeland for eternal peace.

While most foreigners face some form of cultural and racial prejudice in their daily interactions with some not-so-enlightened fellow students and while it is proper to speak against specific incidents, nothing can be achieved by condemning and showing hatred towards everything that is Western.

It is simply another form of racism against White Americans.

The best way to counter stereotypes is through assertiveness and appealing, showing one's confidence and strength, presenting positive images to make definite impressions, but not condemning and alienating others.

It is not the pride and the confidence that is at work here, but rather the lack of it; and its pathetic impact on them, is what brings out their grunts. After all, the positive aspects of one's culture should stand out on their own merit. The best one can do is to present them.

So what makes these few so angry?

As the world came out of the fragmented state of the feudal age, the early industrialized countries colonized the rest of the world. The outside contact and the possession of a few luxury goods of the industrialized world gave a new status to these privileged few, like those given to the party members in the Soviet Russia.

There was a time when one could boast of one's uncle in Germany or in the United States. In their rush to have more Western contacts, they skipped everything that was native.

However, in a rapidly changing world, the miracle of modern technology has brought the outside world to everybody's doorstep. Suddenly, the world is more democratic, and the outside contact is no more a status. They are now finding that their hardworking counterparts prosper in this country while they reach their limits.

The loss of privilege, the lack of sense of belonging and the self-imposed limits make them find no place to turn.

My sympathetic advice to them: Look inward, it's never too late to find one's identity, and maybe even to synthesize the best aspects of both cultures.

"Integrate, don't divide."

Equal treatment for both sides

I decided to attend the "Straight Pride" rally yesterday because I believed that straight affairs should be recognized by the administration. I was disappointed.

A large representation of LBGA was present to yell at the speakers, burn American flags and be nuisances by not allowing the speakers to voice their opinions.

It angers me that, even though their rallies go undisturbed by heterosexuals, they feel it necessary to close their minds and speak against one of their own major themes — freedom of speech.

Their hypocrisy resulted only in angry retaliation from the straight crowd, causing the rally to look like a sideshow.

During the rally, I found out that two of my friends were either gay or bisexual. When they saw my blue sticker, signifying my "straight pride," they referred to it as "sick." I was hurt because I don't ridicule something I don't understand, not because my friends are gay. I was disturbed only that they ridiculed my own sexuality and my own personal beliefs.

I am not against homosexuality. I am, however, for the equal treatment of both groups by the University and the community. If the LBGA is to be recognized and funded, then they should have the courtesy to allow those not funded to speak as well.

If they find this difficult to do, then do us all a favor and keep your own beliefs, funded or not, in the closet.

Students divided will be defeated

Just a few comments about the "Straight Pride" rally. Given it was a waste of everyone's time and a revolting display of ignorance, it did serve to point out one significant problem in our student body, a problem that we must address.

Upon arriving on the Student Union steps, everybody immediately separated. Those in support of "Straight Pride" congregated on the right side of the steps, and those who were secure about their sexuality congregated on the left.

Right vs. Left. Sound familiar? Why is it that students on this campus must always immediately polarize themselves on every issue that arises? It would seem that we could be much more effective in our student activism if united as students, and worked against those forces in society which are constantly assaulting our collective interests (i.e. the Massachusetts State Legislature, Citizens for Limited Taxation, etc.).

There is a problem when we can get 200 students to waste their own time at a rally promoting "straight pride," but can only get 250 students to go to a rally in Boston and fight for their own education.

There is a wide variety of issues which affect us all, such as date rape, the escort service, tuition and fee increases and the environment. If you want to be an activist, I would assume that you want to be effective, so I would encourage all of us to reprioritize our personal agendas, and concentrate on issues that we can all rally behind.

The students, united, will never be defeated. The sixties proved that. The students, divided, will never accomplish anything. The "Straight Pride" rally proved that.

Creative idea for state budget cuts

I am outraged at our state's continuous cutback of funds for higher education and civil services.

The cost of a college education is increasing tremendously, and fire departments are being shut down across the state. These results bring repercussions of their own which directly affect students and taxpayers alike.

In my opinion, the state should look elsewhere to make any further cuts in state-funded programs. As of yet, there appears to be little in the way of creative thinking by the government.

I have one creative idea where the state could cut. I work for a city-contracted ambulance company. Everyday we receive calls from welfare patients requesting transportation for non-emergency problems, such as symptoms associated with the common cold. They usually call us because they have no car and no money for a taxi cab, and welfare pays for ambulance service.

These rides are expensive, over $100 per trip. If the state could come up with something similar to a credit card for taxi service, to be used by welfare recipients for non-emergency medical transportation, much of this fee could be saved.

assists) got the Gorillas going at 1:50, Harvard stayed scoreless against the solid play of goalie Ted Kellerman (13 saves in three quarters) until Paul Faust broke through at 7:28.

Then the floodgates opened, Harvard pulling to a 4-1 lead and never trailing again. UMass twice got within one goal, once as Hiller (two goals, assist) rolled and rifled one over Miller's left shoulder, making it 8-7 with 4:53 left in the half.

Following another of Faust's five goals, sophomore Mike Cain bounced one in with 1:21 left, sending the Gorillas into intermission fired up and down just 9-8.

Whatever momentum UMass had was left in the locker room, though. Almost a half-quarter went by before junior Jim McAleavey (three goals, three assists) broke a dry spell on a picture-perfect feed from Cain. By that time, Harvard was ahead 11-8 and on its way to a six-goal third quarter, a hole from which UMass couldn't escape.

Garber went with sophomore Ray Suris (five stops) in net in the fourth, but he was victimized by Faust right off the faceoff to make it 16-10. Quick goals by McAleavey and Rich Senatore had the faithful Hill back into it, but even with a three-minute man-advantage to end the game, the comeback was too much to ask.

knee in the last basketball game of the season.

She came back in the middle of the season this year to play in five games, and she played hurt in all of them. If she could have stayed healthy, Pytko may have been a valuable asset to this team.

"If Michele's at 100 percent, Michele would have been great because her understanding of the game is so good," Bossio said.

Canadiens stay alive

Guy Carbonneau and Stephane LeBeau each scored two goals and Patrick Roy bounced back to make 28 saves as the Montreal Canadiens staved off elimination from the Stanley Cup playoffs by beating the Boston Bruins, 4-1 last night at The Forum.

The Bruins still lead the series, 3-1 after winning the first three games. They will try again to win their second Adams Division postseason title in three years when the series resumes tomorrow night at 7:30 p.m. at the Boston Garden.

The Bruins, who won the Adams regular season title this year by posting the league's best record, beat the Canadiens in five games in 1988 and advanced to the Stanley Cup finals before being swept by the Edmonton Oilers.

LeBeau scored consecutive goals in the third period to break a 1-1 tie and put the Canadiens on top for good, sliding a backhander past Bruins netminder Andy Moog and then stuffing one home on a goal-mouth scramble.

Carbonneau, who scored into an open net with 41 seconds left to close the scoring, got the game's first goal in the first period, skating out of the left corner and beating Moog to the short side.

The Bruins got their lone goal late in the second period, as John Carter grabbed the rebound of a Bobby Carpenter shot and flipped it over the fallen Roy and under the crossbar. It was the third goal in the last two games for Carter, and his fourth overall in the series.

For the fourth straight game, the Canadiens failed to score a power play goal. They have just two extra-man goals in the playoffs.

Radio offers great jazz variety

By BILL ROSENBLATT
Collegian Staff

The Magic Triangle series is over, and the Iron Horse's run of fine jazz shows has come to an end. What's a jazz listener to do? Listen to the radio. While it isn't quite possible to listen to jazz on the radio 24 hours a day, this area offers a decent amount of jazz-related programming. The following is a guide to such programs that can be received in this area.

As you might expect, most of the stations that play jazz are college and public radio stations. Some of them have weak signals and/or are far away, so you may have trouble getting them in. The stations covered here, all FM, are all receivable on my moderate-quality car radio:

Valley
Jazz

WFCR — 88.5, Amherst (Public Radio)
WAMH — 89.3, Amherst (Amherst College)
WGBH — 89.7, Boston (Public Radio)
WAMC — 90.3, Albany, NY (Public Radio)
WTCC — 90.7, Springfield (Springfield Technical Comm. College)
WMUA — 91.1, Amherst (UMass)
WRSI — 95.3, Greenfield (commercial)

Now, here is a summary of the programs, grouped by daypart:

Mornings: WMUA offers an eclectic mix of jazz styles from traditional to avant-garde on its Morning Jazz Block, weekdays from 9 a.m. to noon. WTCC presents contemporary fusion on weekdays from 10 a.m. to noon with its Mid-Morning Jazz.

Evenings: WAMH's Night Train concentrates on more popular jazz artists and runs on Mondays from 4 p.m. all the way until 2 a.m. Tuesday morning. On the same night, WMUA focuses on contemporary fusion with All That Jazz, a production of the Black Mass Communications Project, from 9:30 p.m. to midnight.

WFCR concentrates on traditional jazz each weekday from 6:30 to 8 p.m. with Jazz a la Mode, a Pioneer Valley institution. Later in the evening, the best bet is the anything-goes mix on WGBH's Eric in the Evening, Mondays through Thursdays from 8:30 p.m. to midnight. This great show is well worth playing with your antenna in order to get it in.

Late nights: WTCC plays Great Black Music according to the following schedule: Wednesdays, 10 p.m. to midnight; Thursdays, 10 p.m. to 3 a.m.; Fridays, midnight to 3 a.m. WAMC offers various jazz-related programs from 11 p.m. to 1 a.m. on weeknights, including concert shows like The American Jazz Radio Festival, interview shows like Marian McPartland's Piano Jazz, and more conventional shows of recorded jazz. Some of these shows are repeated on Sunday nights; their focus is generally "conservative."

Weekends: on Saturday nights, WAMC features The Jazz Decades from 10:30 p.m. to midnight, followed by Jazz After Hours until 5 a.m. WTCC's Great Black Music extends into the weekend on Saturday and Sunday nights from midnight to 3 a.m. WFCR' takes a Safari into African-influenced musics of the world (including jazz, blues, reggae, calypso, soca, Afro-pop, etc.) from 8 p.m. until 2 a.m.

WAMC's Sunday night offerings begin at 6:30 p.m. with Marian McPartland's Piano Jazz, in which she interviews and plays with a different pianist each week. The American Jazz Radio Festival follows at 7:30 and goes until 9:30, at which time Jazz Revisited takes a half-hour look at jazz in the 1940s and before. WAMC finishes its Sunday night jazz programming at 10 p.m. with Le Jazz Club de Paris, a concert show featuring the best European jazz musicians as well as American expatriates living in Europe. WRSI offers Jazz After Hours (not WAMC's show of the same name) on Sunday nights from 9:30 p.m. to 12:30 a.m.

Peace dance in the Cage

The Cage will be rocking this Saturday afternoon. No, there will be no basketball game and the annual spring concert has not been moved indoors. Instead, Curry Hicks Cage will rock with spirituality, as the Circle the Earth for Peace Dance will be held within its confines at 2 p.m.

The dance, believed to be "an act of magic," was brought here in honor of Earth Day by dance director Julie Mahoney.

"This is the first time the dance has been done at UMass," Mahoney said. It's a really big celebration and we'd like people to come to make it happen. This is something that's been a global event for the past 11 years."

People from all over the world will be participating in the event. Nili Sneh, a UMass graduate student from Israel, who performs the sacred Japanese form of flower arranging (Ikebana), will perform the opening ceremonies.

Participants have been practicing the dance since the end of March. Maloney hopes there will be a large turnout to watch the spiritually uplifting event.

"Witnesses are an integral part of the piece," she said. "They actually support the magic that takes place."

Admission to the dance is free.

Pixels: digitally dazzling computer art

By JACK THOMPSON
Collegian Correspondent

Pixels: Picture Elements is an important computer art exhibit running now at the Student Union Gallery. If you haven't seen it yet, go now.

Five talented UMass graduating BFA's show the results of their individual interaction with the computer as an artistic medium. The variety of the results only proves the versatility of the computer in an artist's repertoire.

If you don't get there by tomorrow, here's what you'll miss:

The humanizing potential of desktop publishing in Marykate Haley's children's book of African proverbs, If There Is A Mosquito On Your Head, Don't Hit It With A Rock. Her theme is there is no phrase without two meanings.

The fluidity of the photo digitizing process is brought to life in a college lifestyle by Catherine Gilbert's "Portraits Of My Family."

A playful use of the entire gamut of computer animation, voice, music and sound in creating Ronya Boss' "The Girl Who Ate Garlic."

Tom Vigneau's "Stepping Out" addressing the questions inherent in the Human/Machine interface with a wry wit.

A gut-wrenching piece by James Haskins is "Alternative Advertising." Haskins' slide show of jarring black and white digitized photos juxtaposed against popular ad slogans is a deconstruction of contemporary advertising images and exhibits a near "CyberPunk" sensibility.

There is no sound and each image (complete with Universal Product Code) lingers on the video monitor for almost 20 seconds. Eight images altogether make up this piece; beginning with the artist placing his face behind the "bars" of a large UPC symbol, indicating how we are all "products" for sale.

The rest of the images show such things as a floor view of a man trying to lick up thumb tacks; the slogan says "Alive With Pleasure." The rest of the piece uses the male as object in the same way many ads show women, creating more irony.

The gallery is open 11 a.m. to 4 p.m.

'Handmaid:' a bleak look at the future

By DAVE COUSINEAU
Collegian Correspondent

Once upon a time
In the not too recent future,
A country went wrong . . .

This quote opens the film adaptation of Margaret Atwood's novel, The Handmaid's Tale, a compelling, if not disturbing view of the future in which the country that has gone "wrong," is our own.

Years of pollution and toxic waste have taken a heavy toll (nine out of ten women are now sterile) and ultra right-wing religious zealots have assumed control of the nation, renaming it Gilead. Under their twisted rule, many infertile women are carted away in livestock bins, and Black people are rounded up by the military to be marched off to an unknown fate. Only the fertile White women are spared, for they are considered "blessed" by the Lord.

Kate (Natasha Richardson) is one of these "Vessels of the Seed," and through her eyes, we see the women conditioned, brainwashed and tortured into becoming submissive "handmaids," whose sole purpose is to bear children to the men of Gilead. The men are never tested for sterility, and even if they are incapable of fathering children, the handmaids still take the blame.

Eventually, Kate is assigned to a childless couple (Robert Duvall and Faye Dunaway), in which the husband happens to be the Commander of Security for the state. She is given a new name, Offred, which identifies her as the property of the man, and proceeds to carry out her "duties." Sex takes the form of an impersonal act called The Ceremony, based on an Old Testament tale of Jacob and his barren wife. The Commander's wife participates in the act, though her role is an absolutely useless one.

As Gilead's army, The Angels of Light, combat fierce resistance from Baptist guerillas, Offred meets Ofglen, another handmaid who asks if she is willing to use her access to the Commander to aid the growing rebellion . . .

This film's vision of our society brought to such Hitlerian extremes is shocking, but its literal treatment of the subject is surprisingly low-key. Director Volker Schlorndorf is not melodramatic, he simply depicts Offred's day to day existence and lets Atwood's ominous story speak for itself. There is little background music. The camera dollies, documentary-style, past the rows and rows of women filing through the processing station where their future will be decided based only on whether or not their ovaries are "still jumping."

Even the acting lacks life. It's so reserved that it's almost boring; but that is where most of the film's impact stems from. What we the audience see happening is appalling, but to the characters, it's just another typical day in Gilead. It's accepted. It's reality; and that concept is where the film's most frightening message is conveyed.

The film's most striking visual aspect is Schlorndorf's use of color. The society's fixation with conformity is reflected in the long red cloaks worn by all the handmaids, the identical blue outfits with pearls and matching high heels worn by all the wives. The bright colors contrast sharply with the bleak experience of the handmaids. At the center, the future handmaids sleep in a dreary gymnasium on military cots, but their blue comforters are so brilliant they almost shine in the dark. In the examination room, where a doctor tests their devotion by trying to seduce them, the walls are painted a vibrant green. It is as if the government is using the simple, pleasant colors to subliminally reassure people that their lives are good and happy.

Sclorndorf (a European) and Atwood (a Canadian) pull no punches in letting everyone know that this warped country was once America. Color comes into play again when wives, handmaids and handmaids-to-be all assemble in a large arena. The sun is shining and patriotic music is playing over the loudspeakers. The rows of women, in their red, white and blue costumes give the scene an air of a Fourth of July celebration, or a good old American political convention. This mood is altered drastically, however, when it is revealed that this is not a party or a rally, but rather a public execution. History is said to repeat itself, and these ex-Americans are repeating the Spanish Inquisition, the Salem Witch Trials and the McCarthy era all at once.

Faye Dunaway

All of its intensity and power aside, the film's biggest flaw is that the ending. though it reveals more than the novel did, is somewhat abrupt. Questions are left unanswered, which is perturbing, but this was probably done for a reason. We don't know what will happen to Kate/Offred, just as we don't know what's really going to happen to this country. The film makers are afraid that it will become a Gilead if we let it. So by forcing us to wonder about the character, they are helping us to think about our own futures, and hopefully prevent such extremity.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Keep a tighter rein on office politics and spending. Although a job offer sounds tempting, you may do better by staying put. A calm partner brings great happiness into your life.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): An animated discussion could point the way to achievement of your aims. Welcome fresh ideas regarding self-promotion. News about foreign investments is encouraging. Spend time alone with mate.

GEMINI (May 21-June 22): A wonderful day for the self-employed. Your partner or mate will make a huge difference in your personal life if you make the first move. Do not get too smug about helping others.

CANCER (June 23-July 22): Learn to recognize new trends in business. Adhering to old-fashioned methods will deplete your profits. Control a tendency to be too demanding lest you risk losing a friend or lover.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Think twice about an opportunity to buy real estate in a distant place. Family members and business associates may urge you to make a decisions in a hurry. Refuse to be stampeded.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Weigh a financial matter carefully before discussing it with your accountant. Bargains abound but sale merchandise should be closely examined. A free spirit adds excitement to your social life. Go slow.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Keep business and personal affairs separate or you can expect to receive flack from your co-workers. Travel helps you clinch a lucrative agreement. Investigate unusual career opportunities.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Look for unique ways to advance a pet project. An influential person shows renewed interest in your efforts. Charm is your greatest asset in face-to-face encounters. Romance is a roller coaster!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Try not to force an issue today. Your enterprising spirit will help you obtain financial backing. News or a visitor from afar is a source of happiness. Share secrets tonight.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Steady effort pays off big. Do not let others take advantage of your good nature. Security will be improved if you tighten existing regulations. A romantic relationship has you guessing.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Property values may be higher than anticipated. Resist the temptation to accept a first offer. Family relationships show decided improvement. Urge a young person to curb extravagance.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Community activities hold special appeal now. An unusual incident gives you new insights regarding someone you thought to be a friend. See others as they really are – not as you wish they are!

Gorillas upended by No. 6 Crimson, 18-15

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team pulled out all the stops yesterday, but there was no overcoming Harvard University.

The sixth-ranked Crimson proved that they are a team worthy of being right where they are – in the hunt for a berth in the playoffs. Harvard took an early lead and held off all UMass challenges for an 18-15 win at The Hill.

"Overall they just outplayed us," said UMass coach Dick Garber. "They handled the ball better, they're a helluva team."

And while Harvard was boosting its postseason stock, the Gorillas (7-3) saw theirs take a giant leap backward. UMass is going to have to do some serious work (and maybe some praying) in the next couple of weeks to have a shot at its fifth straight NCAA tournament bid.

"I'd say that's pretty much out the window," Garber said.

UM's Jim McAleavey and Harvard's Dan O'Sullivan battle for the ball during yesterday's 18-15 win for the Crimson at The Hill.

At times yesterday, the Gorillas simply didn't look like a team that belonged in the big dance. Sloppy play stuck out on several occasions, and Harvard was powerful enough to capitalize on any chances it got.

"They beat us to every ground ball," Garber said, although the stats clearly dispute that – UMass holding a 39-35 advantage. However, Harvard seemingly got the keys ones to maintain possession at critical points, and Chad Prusmack performed yeoman's work on faceoffs with a 23-14 edge.

Nonetheless, the Gorillas tried right to the end, reaching deep into the bag o' tricks to salvage the 'W.' Down 18-14 with 3:09 to play, Garber called for a stick check on Crimson attackman Mick Cavuoti.

"One of our kids said he thought it was too short," Garber said of Cavuoti's stick, which like everyone else's must be at least 40 inches in length. "I said [to the officials], 'measure it for length.' I wasn't worried about the pocket."

But it was the pocket the referee noticed. Cavuoti's stick was illegal and UMass was granted a three-minute power play. Harvard tried to counter with a check of senior attack Rob Codignotto's stick, and that failed challenge seemed to fire up the troops even more.

But UMass could muster only one goal (by sophomore Rob Falvey with 2:05 to play) against a tough defense and goaltender Chris Miller (19 saves).

Defensive lapses turned into Harvard runs, which spelled trouble the entire game for UMass. Poor passing decisions played a big role as well, UMass coughing up chances to control on many occasions and Harvard seemingly sticking every one back down the home team's windpipe.

"We went right back to doing what we did in Arizona," said senior attack Scott Hiller, referring to the passing deficiencies of the Gorillas early in the season.

"I'm disappointed we didn't play a little smarter," Garber said. "Guys were throwing the ball across the field. We never throw East to West, always North to South and let the attackmen go with it."

Early on, the Gorillas looked to be playing the same type of blanketing defense that held the Crimson to four goals in last year's meeting. After Codignotto (five goals, two

Gazelles play what may be final game

Looking to finish up with win vs. Dartmouth

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

Coming into this season there were three players on the University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team that knew they would be playing their last collegiate game for UMass today.

There were 17 others who thought they would be playing many more games for the Gazelles in the next couple of years. However, that is all up in the air now. Those players, who are mostly freshmen and sophomores, may never play another game for UMass again.

The Gazelles have been yet another victim of the budget cuts at UMass. The program at UMass which has been intact for 15 years, has been suspended indefinitely after this season because of the cuts.

With no hope of postseason play, today's game with Dartmouth (3 p.m. at Hanover, N.H.) will mark the end of the 1990 regular season for the Gazelles, who are 4-9.

Those three seniors, Sue Murphy, Ann King and Michele Pytko will lead UMass out of an era.

Murphy, a sport management major from Boyertown, Pa., has been the big gun of the trio for the last three years. Benefitting from the tutelage of ex-UMass forward Lisa Griswold, who played with Murphy in her freshman year, Murphy has turned into UMass' go-to player.

She took over Griswold's position on the team, shouldering most of the scoring load for coach Patti Bossio. Murphy has led the team in scoring for the past three years. This year the co-captain's totals include 28 goals and two assists.

"She is one of the best 1-on-1 players in the country," Bossio said. "Murph is one of the best competitors I have ever coached. She plays from minute 1 to 50."

The rest of the lacrosse afficionados in the country have also recognized this. Murphy has been selected to play in the North-South Senior All-Star game in May. None of this has come easy for her though.

"We didn't have another big scoring threat so every one doubled, tripled and quadruple teamed her," Bossio said. "She got hammered. The other teams thought if you stop Sue Murphy, you stop UMass.

"This year, there really wasn't anyone to help elevate Murph's play. The rest of the team had to try to come up to Murph's level."

King, also a co-captain, helped take a little bit of the scoring load off of Murphy's shoulders. The Upper Montclair, N.J. native contributed 15 goals and three assists to the UMass attack.

"I don't ever worry about her and Murph, because they will just do it," Bossio said. "I don't think I have ever had two better captains."

On the field, King is the blue collar player. Off the field, she has been the leader.

"She is someone, whose hard work and sheer determination has made her a great player," Bossio said. "She is a very responsible team leader. I know Anny will always do what's right. She is a very good leader on and off the field. She keeps everything in perspective."

Four games ago, King was asked to do what Bossio felt what was right for the team. Bossio's defensive corp is a young one this year. There needed to be some leadership in the backfield and King seemed just the one to fill the bill.

"It's sort of taking her attack away but she has given our defense leadership," Bossio said.

The defense would have been a lot stronger this year if it had the presence of Pytko back there for the entire season. Pytko was the project of the team.

Three years ago, she made Bossio's team without ever having picked up a stick before trying out. But Pytko's reputation as a great athlete was already known at UMass at the time. She has been a guard for the UMass women's basketball team the past four years. Her basketball skills ended up transferring very well to the lacrosse field as she won her way into the starting lineup by midseason.

"Just her presence has helped us because she understands the game from a basketball point of view and that has helped the younger kids," Bossio said.

Pytko's lacrosse career at UMass seemed to be very promising. But an injury last year during basketball season, sidelined her for the season. Pytko was all ready to come back this year, when she injured her

Baseball focusing on revenge vs. Hartford

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts baseball coach Mike Stone is unhappy with his team's lack of concentration.

Yesterday, Stone held a team meeting which he hoped would "change the team's frame of mind."

"We work hard, but we [seem to] let down, our concentration is lacking at times," Stone said. "We have people hoping to win, we need people to take action so that we do win.

"We've had guys with 3-and-2 counts who lose concentration [resulting in strikeouts], we can't afford to let down. We need to be into the game [mentally] on every pitch," Stone said.

Today the Minutemen have a chance to redeem themselves from an earlier trouncing from Hartford (3 p.m., Lorden Field). Earlier this season the Hawks beat up on the UMass pitching staff, scoring 15 runs enroute to an easy 15-6 win in West Hartford. Jim Telgheder was one of the pitchers Hartford faced, and once again, Telgheder gets the call against the Hawks.

"I hope that our players are thinking revenge," Stone said. "I'd sure like to get back at them."

At the time, the loss to Hartford snapped a five-game winning streak. Nineteen games later, the Minutemen and Hawks each find themselves losers of four of their last five. While this game may not be a big game in the standings (it's not), both teams need a win to get back on track.

Hartford is not the same team that the Minutemen faced back on April 5. At the time, the Hawks were hitting just .222 as a team, and their ERA was near nine. The Hawks have improved their average to .260 and their pitching to 6.63.

Joe Bellino comes into today's game leading the Hawks with a .348 average while Wayne Chambers is pacing the pitchers with a 3.08 ERA. Hartford is only 8-18 for the season, they were 2-9 last time the Minutemen faced them.

Atlantic 10 notes: James Cann of Rutgers was named player-of-the-week. Cann batted .560 and knocked in 12 runs.

Mike Migliarese of St. Joseph's leads the A-10 with a batting average of .439, and Drew Comeau is eighth (.393).

Todd Miller of Temple has compiled the best ERA thus far, (2.12). Scott Meaney is third (2.91) and Dan O'Leary (3.48) is seventh.

Jerry Creamer has four saves, tops in the conference. Comeau leads the conference with 15 doubles.

Wondering how the Western Division is doing: West Virginia is 12-4, George Washington 9-3, Penn State 6-2, St. Bonaventure 3-9, and bringing up the rear is Duquesne at 2-14.

Field notes: If UMass wins three out of four games against Temple this weekend (at Temple) they clinch a spot in the tournament playoffs. Temple is currently 5-3 in the A-10 while the Minutemen are 8-4. Rutgers leads the division with a 10-2 record. Temple has yet to play four games against Rutgers.

Stat of the week: UMass is undefeated (3-0) against teams from Massachusetts, but the Minutemen are 0-4 versus teams from Connecticut.

THIS & WEEKEND

By RORY EVANS
Collegian Staff

It's hard to imagine the Vestrymen having thousands of die-hard fans flocking to South Amherst to catch a glimpse of "The Ruby Ranch," the original hangout of the fave four.

But with the recent release of their first feature-length album, this Valley band is one step closer to that dream.

In the four years of their existence, the Vestrymen have released two cassette-only recordings, but this month their self-titled LP hits the racks in both the United States and England. Tonight Pearl Street hosts their record release party.

The Vestrymen's home base is a tired, crimson single-family house nestled in the suburbia of harmless Bay Road. The band prefers to transfer it into storybook lore by calling it "The Ruby Ranch."

Matthew Davis, Timo Lipping, Andy Boose and Chris Weinberg make up the core of the group. Lipping and Weinberg are both currently UMass students, Davis a recent Amherst College grad and Boose an Amherst College junior.

The four can often be found at "The Ranch" burning incense, wearing second-hand paisley and love beads, and listening to everything from Jane's Addiction to modern Spanish love songs. From this highly inspirational atmosphere the band pontificates on its present state.

According to the band's singer/songwriter Davis, describing people who like their music is hard to do. "Many people are surprised when they hear us because they expect us to be more alternative, weird for the sake of weird," he said. "I think people find our music easier to relate to than they expected. They are surprised to find it's music they can tap their foot to and understand the words."

Boose, the band's lead guitarist, said the sound on their new album is "the acoustic, woodsy Vestrymen sound."

Davis attributes the focus of the sound to their producer, Brad Morrison. "We have many different sounds, but for the album Brad shaped us into one sound," he said.

Traci Swartz, Vestrymanager, said that the album is a manifestation of a year's worth of work. "It's hard to believe that in less than a year we've seen this record through," she said. "It's nice to hold something in your hand that a year ago wasn't even a possibility – other than a hypothetical."

Simply having an album out doesn't make Graceland out of the Ruby Ranch, nor do any of the band members refer to themselves as "The King." Swartz said that the next obstacle lies in getting concert dates to promote the album.

"It's hard for a band – no matter how good they are – to get into clubs," she said. "There are a lot of politics involved." And money is a consideration too.

"It's difficult because we spent money on the record production, and now we have to get money to go on tour," Swartz said.

Going on tour is a possibility, especially this summer, when classes for Lipping, Boose and Weinberg no longer present a conflict.

Lipping admitted that school work is not the only limitation, however. "A lot has to do with moving albums," he said. "Right now we are an unknown quantity, at least until we sell out our first pressing. We don't have leverage yet. We need to have people coming to us."

Right now, the band is dealing in modest optimism.

"In the next six months, the band will become a lot bigger," Weinberg said.

Lipping added, "We have no illusions about overnight success. We have to work at it."
